Summer Stories

From Skinny Dips on Lily Pond Lane to Lost Blondes on the S.I. Ferry

By Dan Rattiner

Well, the long hot summer is over, and it's time to sum up. My two favorite stories of this summer took place on the Shelter Island Ferry and on Lily Pond Lane in East Hampton.

As you probably know, the ferry between North Haven and Shelter Island goes back and forth every ten minutes. It pulls into its slip on one side and the cars get off and other cars get on. Then they close the gate, motor across, let those cars off on the other side and other cars get on. It's pretty routine.

One sultry afternoon, on the North Haven side, the workers were just closing the gate when a woman in a white Mercedes convertible appeared, roaring up Ferry Road honking her horn madly. The workers stopped closing the gate and reopened it. No sense holding her up.

She roared down the hill, clattered on board and came breathlessly to a halt. Made it. As the gate slammed shut behind her.

Made it. As the gate slammed shut behind her, the ferry engine roared and it left the dock, one of the workers wandered over. He was going to ask her to buy a ticket. But she beat him to it.

"How much further is Scuttlehole Road?" she said. "I'm lost."

"Where you trying to get, lady?" the worker asked.

She looked startled.
"Hey," she said. "This is a ferry."

Every day, the Village police in downtown East Hampton slowly patrol the streets of the estate section of that town, looking for anything that might be amiss. Many of these mansions, even during the summer, are used only weekends. Of course, whether they are or

...seven naked people jumped out and, whooping and hopping, did belly flops and cannonballs into the pool aren't is a private matter, but the police stay aware of things, and it's a comfort they do.

One Wednesday, the police noticed a man they had never seen before lounging by the pool at one of these homes. They didn't think much of it, but because this was a home that was generally only occupied weekends, they decided to keep an eye on it. The man was there Thursday, too. On Friday he was gone, however, and then in the evening, the familiar owners of the house showed up. They left Sunday night.

When the man was back out by the pool Monday, they reported it to headquarters. And on Tuesday, after a discussion with headquarters, they decided they ought to pay him a visit. They drove up the gravel driveway to the pool and they woke him up. He had fallen asleep under a newspaper. And after some polite conversation, they decided to arrest him. He's been charged with trespassing and breaking and entering. Among other things, the key to the Land Rover that the owners keep out at their vacation house during the summer was found when they had this fellow empty his pockets.

This particular story reminds me of another that happened a few years ago at the home of a friend of mine on Lily Pond Lane.

At nine o'clock of a late August evening, this couple was having dinner in the dining room of their home with the newly appointed American Ambassador to the Czech Republic and his wife. The Ambassador was about to leave to take up his post. And their hosts had just come back from three weeks in Prague. So there was lots to talk about.

It was a magnificently elegant evening, and at 10:30, dessert and coffee were served as a full moon rose over the hedgerows and reflected off the water in the swimming pool. Cognac was poured.

At that moment, at the far end of the long gravel driveway leading up to the house, the two couples could see the headlights of a car coming toward them. The ambassador glanced at it. The host recognized who it was.

"Oh, don't worry about that," the host said.
"We have some New York friends who rented a small cottage nearby. We told them while we were away they were welcome to use our pool."

"Oh."

In moments, this car had pulled up — it was a black convertible — and seven naked people jumped out and, whooping and hopping, did belly flops and cannonballs into the pool. This was plainly visible to the two couples in the dining room, but they said nothing. After a while, the people in the pool got out, dried themselves, hopped back into the car and drove away.

About an hour later, the hosts led their guests to the front door, said their farewells, and then went up to get ready for bed.

"We should have told them we were coming home a week early," the wife said.

"Yes," the husband replied.

Film Festivals

The First October 19 to

By Dan Rattiner

Well, the film festival is coming. I'm not talking about the Hamptons International Film Festival, which takes place between October 19 and 23 with the showing of more than 200 fresh new films vying for awards. I'm talking about the Dan's Papers Film Festival, which runs from October 29 to December 10 here in East Hampton. Every Saturday afternoon during that time we show films that were made over the years here on the East End in the main theatre at the Ross School on Goodfriend Drive off Route 114 in East Hampton. We show six in all this autumn. Then we show another six in the springtime. No tickets, no VIPs, no waiting in lines, no big parties, no glamour.

Just the movies that were, together with the commentary of film critic Guy de Fraumeni, occasional guests from the movies being shown, and wine and cheese in the lobby. All for free.

This is our thirteenth anniversary year showing the Dan's Papers Film Festival. Our schedule for this fall's upcoming season has not been revealed (wait for the televised press conference) but here are some highlights from prior years.

We showed GREY GARDENS, the famous documentary by Albert and Dave Maysles, shot orth Haven. But Alda also petitioned the allage of Sag Harbor to "rent" the entire Main reet for a night for a scene, and they voted to be this. Nothing like that had ever happened fore. You have to see this scene.

Michael Caine and Christopher Reeve arred in the thriller DEATH TRAP, filmed at house in Water Mill during that era. East ampton's Sidney Lumet directed this movie. here was a scene on a Long Island Railroad train, then a scene with a cabby driving Christopher Reeve to Water Mill after he fell asleep and woke up at Montauk.

r 20 to December 10

A more recent movie we showed, with an entirely different plot, had a very similar scene. In ETERNAL SUNSHINE OF THE SPOTLESS MIND, made in 2003, Kate Winslet and Jim Carrey meet on a Long Island Rail Road train heading out to Montauk, unaware that they knew each ther intimately before. It's a mind boggling cience fiction romantic comedy, if that is a possible category name. They've had their ninds erased. Some parts of this were shot at the beach in Montauk, some at the beachfront nome of Michael Kennedy in Wainscott.

A film we had planned to show, but were in he end not allowed to, was one called MR.

SPIELBERG'S BOAT. It was filmed around 1990 in Sag Harbor and was about two filmmakers who want to get their 'movie in progress' seen by Steven Spielberg. He politely declines. But then they see, looking out the window of this mansion where they are filming in Noyack, his one hundred foot yacht puttering through Peconic Bay and they cannot believe their good fortune. When the ship drops anchor there, the film takes a kind of commando turn as the filmmakers attempt to get it to him in spite of his denials. Why could we not show this movie? Steven Spielberg sued. He has no big yacht. He felt it unfair he be portrayed in that manner. And so the movie got scrubbed.

We screen DEEP IMPACT, directed by Mr. Spielberg, who lives in East Hampton, in which there was a scene made on the beach in Amagansett. (Here comes the meteor. Everybody look up.) And we have screened Spielberg's AMISTAD, about a slave ship that hoves up off Montauk in the 1840s, the slaves in charge, the Spanish masters below. A true story.

One of the earliest movies made here was

e Keaton and Jack Nicholson

Rudolph Valentino's RETURN OF THE SHEIK. The directors could not afford the desert of Arabia, so they went out to the Walking Dunes in Montauk (heading east go left just before Cyril's Bar) and they plopped down a couple of palm trees and voila — an Oasis in the desert. This was in 1923.

We've shown lots of actors involved with violence in the Hamptons. Who could forget the day they blew up a yacht just outside the jetties of Montauk for the movie MASQUERADE starring Rob Lowe. Or the day that Brad Pitt came flying through a boathouse window during a fight at the docks in Greenport in the movie THE DEVIL'S OWN? Cut! Okay everybody, let's do it again.

We've shown ROCKET GIBRALTER starring Burt Lancaster, filmed entirely in Bridgehampton. We've shown SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE starring Jack Nicholson and Diane Keaton, filmed almost entirely in East Hampton. And we've even shown a simply awful science fiction movie called THE FLESHEATERS, filmed in 1962 almost entirely on the beach in Montauk (look out! It's coming out of the sea!) starring Martin Koslik. This prompted one theatre goer, during the Question and Answer period that comes after every movie we show, to comment "this was the worst movie I have ever seen."

As I said earlier in this article, we screened THE RETURN OF THE SHEIK, which we believed was the earliest movie ever made on the East End. But now we have learned there

"Sag Harbor" Returns

Downtown Big Block Party on October 14 Celebrates the Sign

By Dan Rattiner

Most towns here on the East End have some sort of symbol they are known for. Montauk has its lighthouse. East Hampton has its windmill. Southampton has Monument Square. One and a half years ago, a woman named Brenda Siemer came out of a Yoga class on Main Street in Sag Harbor to find that a signmaker was removing the big SAG HARBOR neon sign from off the movie theatre. It was old and rusted. And the owner was taking it down to replace it with a new, cheap plastic one.

Brenda Siemer went from store to store on Main Street and rallied the town. Soon there was a group of people out by the signmaker's truck demanding that he leave the old sign with them. They would restore it. And so they

I might say it took a lot of persuading to make it happen. This was a sign privately owned by the man who owned the movie theatre, and if he wanted to take it down and put up a plastic one to replace it, he could. Who were these people to stop him?

* Well, after a while, the citizenry won him over — they were his customers too after all and he allowed that the restoration could go ahead. It also helped that the Village Trustees informed the theatre owner that if he took the old sign down (which he did), he could only put one back up exactly as the old. The sign predated zoning, actually first put up in the 1950s. It could not be changed in any way, except to be restored as-is without a zoning variance. And he didn't have one.

And so, last year, a fundraiser was held and money raised. The sign was sent away. The signmaker who was supposed to restore it sat it in a corner. And then he went out of business. So the townspeople had to start over.

During the end of last year and the beginning of this, there were at least three world premieres of new movies at the Sag Harbor Theatre. But people, particularly outsiders,

A JAIL OF A TALE ABOUT PRESS FREEDOMS

By Dan Rattiner

New York Times reporter Judith Miller was released from jail on Friday afternoon after agreeing to testify to a Grand Jury investigating how she got the name of a secret CIA agent in June of 2003. She had refused to say who had told her the name of this agent who was Valerie Plame Wilson - saving it would be a violation of journalistic ethics to tell. She could not reveal her sources. As a result, a judge ordered her jailed for withholding information, and she spent 84 days in jail in Connecticut. Now, finally agreeing to say what she knew, she did testify and then was released.

"All I want to do is go home to Sag Harbor and my husband (editor Jason Epstein). I am very tired," she told a press conference after her release. She did indeed look very pale and gaunt from her incarceration.

On one level, this is a classic case of a reporter going to jail after refusing to testify about something. Clearly, reporters need to be able to talk to back room sources freely before writing. If reporters are forced to say who told them things when they are passed on in confidence, people are likely to refuse to say anything at all. As a result, the public will know less about what is going on. And that is very, very bad for democracy and freedom.

On another level, this is a very sorry case to stand on principle about. There are many examples where reporters have stood up like this. This should not have been one of them. This should, in my opinion, have been the exception, where the reporter got up and said loud and clear what she knew. For the sake of the country, it would have been more important for her to have done so. Clearly, this was something that should have had a full airing all around. And now has anyway.

were confused. What theatre? There was a theatre? Without any sign whatsoever — and while it was away there was not one — what was there to point out that this was a movie theatre anyway? Well, you could ask. A movie house without a marquee. How chic.

And now, there comes the Hamptons International Film Festival and Brenda Siemer, who successfully got the owner of the movie theatre back into all this, is just so determined to get him out. For the film festival, the sign will be back up. And just in time.

"We expect the sign to be put up on Thursday, October 13, six days before the beginning of the Film Festival, she said. "It is coming to Long Island this week from the new signmaker's shop in Parsippany, New Jersey, arriving at the neon maker's shop in Nassau County at the beginning of next week. There the neon tubes will be installed. On Thursday, October 13, it will be shipped out here and put up. We hope."

A big block party in front of the theatre in the center of town is being planned for Friday afternoon beginning at 5:30 on October 14. Speeches will be made. There will be entertainment. Both Corcoran Real Estate and the Grenning Photography Gallery next door will serve cocktails and hors d'oeuvres in the afternoon for the expected crowds, and there will be many donations of food and drink; for example, crackers and cheese coming from Cavaniola's Market down the street. People will toast the sign. Then in the evening, the restaurant JLX on Main Street is offering an open bar for the celebrants.

It is expected there will be a "rain" date. "Rain" is defined as — they didn't get the sign finished in time. Well, maybe that won't happen. And as the sun sets, the sign will be turned on once again, beckoning movie goers with neon and announcing, as it has done for the last half century, that here you are, now in Sag Harbor. Home of the famous Whaling Museum, Long Wharf, the Presbyterian Church and the Customs House. And oh yes, the symbol of the town, the big neon SAG HARBOR sign on the movie marquee. You can't miss it.

was an earlier one. It was called HULDA OF HOLLAND and was made in 1919 in Bridgehampton. Starring in it was Mary Pickford, "America's Sweetheart," who plays, um, Hulda, a gutsy young Dutch girl who comes with her two younger brothers to America to live with their rich uncle. She falls in love with an artist and lives happily ever after. Bridgehampton? At the time, they needed Holland. Bridgehampton had a windmill, called the Hayground Windmill, located on a hill next to a few homes off Hayground Road, (since moved to East Hampton) and it looked like Holland. So they filmed Holland here.

Will we show it? The problem is getting a copy of it. We're working on it. So far, we've been told the only existing reel of this film is located in a museum in Prague, Czech Republic. We're looking further.

If you're coming out here for the Hamptons International Film Festival from October 19 to October 23, you really ought to consider extending your stay for two months and enjoying the Saturday afternoon Dan's Papers Film Festival. Rents are cheaper in the late autumn. Rent by the month.

Meanwhile, here are some of the highlights of the upcoming Hamptons International Film Festival.

Opening night will feature Bee Season, starring Flora Cross, Richard Gere and Juliette Binoche. The film, based on the Myla Goldberg novel, tells the story of a young girl who suffered in her parents' intellectual shadow until she excels in a spelling bee. It changes everything.

Sag Harbor's Hope Davis stars alongside Nicholas Cage and Michael Caine in the closing film, The Weather Man. Cage plays a local Chicago weatherman who is a target for gentle abuse by the public (especially when throwing milkshakes). His apathy in his work and family life is eventually called into question and he decides to do something about it.

Also worth mentioning is the world premiere of The Cry, a tale of a vengeful mother who rips the throats out of unfaithful men and kidnaps

Motoring 100 Miles Through the Back Roads in a 58-Year-Old Bentley

By David Lion Rattiner

Last weekend the Bridgehampton Historical Society had their annual Vintage Sports Car

Road Rally and Tour. The event is basically a bunch of people that have really old and awesome cars getting together and showing them off. I have always liked this event because you can get up close and personal with some of the most amazing cars that have ever come off an assembly line. There are old Bentleys, there are old Jaguars, there are old Ford Thunderbirds and every other spectacular car that you can think of.

There is another side to this event, however, that does not get as much attention and that side is the competition. The road rally is not just a fashion show with cars, it is a real deal competition with very serious rules, regulations and focused competitors looking to win. It is a game of wits, navigation skills and timing.

For those that don't know, the drivers of all the cars have to complete about 100 miles of specific routes all throughout the Hamptons in a specific amount of time. There are tracking pipes that are laid down in the middle of the street that time exactly when you reach certain locations. The challenge is to complete the route that has been set aside for all of the drivers in the exact amount of time that has been set. Some of the routes are timed at faster paces than others so it can get really tricky and also cause some real deal driving. There are also "spotters" along the entire journey, to prevent people from cheating.

I had the opportunity to sit in the back seat of a 1948 Bentley that was competing in the race. It is owned by Alan Kaplan who owns Island Group Administration and who is a very nice guy. I was psyched to be riding along in this car. This Bentley was absolutely ridiculously amazing. It had a leather interior, was running perfectly and was, well, a Bentley. I don't think that you can beat a Bentley when it comes to outrageous cars. Maybe a Ferrari beats a Bentley. I mentioned this to Alan who responded with, "Yeah, I have one of those too."

The navigator of this car was Charles Schwendler, who owns T&B Auto in Amagansett. Charles was taking the road rally very seriously. He had two stopwatches and began explaining the strategy of our car. "We are going to start this stop watch exactly when the race starts. When we get to the first checkpoint, we'll stop it and try to get as close to the time as possible. The second, and I mean the second that we hit that checkpoint we have to start the other stopwatch. I'm going to put you in charge of that. All you have to do is push this button here."

I was already being given responsibility and I didn't even know what was going on. This was serious stuff we had stopwatches, we had maps, we were checking gauges. This was not just fun and games.

By the time we had started the race we were already getting a little confused heading into Sagaponack. I was really impressed by Schwendler's and Kaplan's communication skills, "Is the next street on the left or on the right?" Kaplan asked.

"It's on the left.....I think."

"Well, which is it?"

"Hang on!"

We made a hard left hand turn onto Sagg Main Road. The Bentley was nearly on two wheels as Kaplan magically handled the fifty-eight year old car. We were still on track.

"Dave, how much time?" Schwendler asked.

"We are at two minutes and thirty sec-

"We have to hustle through here, we only have two minutes left."

I felt the Bentley pick up some speed as we barreled over a bridge.

"There is no way that they were going the speed limit when they timed this," Kaplan

"I think that it has to do with the pickup," Schwendler responded.

As we made it up to the first check point, The Bridgehampton Golf Club, we were about ten seconds behind the mark as we rolled through.

"We have to pick up the pace," Schwendler said.

It was at this point that Alan was really hitting the gas to match the pickup of a newer car. Throughout the rest of the rally, we were showing up at checkpoints early. This gave us a nice break and allowed us to check out our competition. The car to beat was a red '55 MG driven by Richard Weintraub and Gerard Jeffery. These two young guys won last year. "They timed it perfectly," said Schwendler.

Alan Kaplan and Charles Schwendler

The race to the finish went on relatively smoothly for the '48 Bentley until we reached Montauk. Neither the driver nor the navigator of our car was confident about the roads in Montauk and they started asking me if I was familiar with Camp Hero. I told them that I was, having played baseball there when I was in Little League. This was a pretty big mistake on my part.

Both Kaplan and Schwendler had figured out the exact mileage between the end of old Montauk Highway and the entrance to the East gate at Camp Hero. Unfortunately, our calculations did not add up and we found ourselves at the North gate at Camp Hero, a location that is blocked off by an iron fence.

"This has to be the entrance, why is it blocked off? Dave, do you know what is going on?" said Schwendler.

I had absolutely no idea what the heck was going on and couldn't figure it out either. Where the heck was the entrance? We had maps and had the distances and everything. I was getting really upset because so far we were doing really good and had not gotten lost once. "I don't know what is going on."

We started breaking out our maps again and also started looking at our watches. I was even checking out the positioning of the sun. Here we were, three really intelligent guys and we were totally lost. We finally gave up and decided to just guess and got back on 27 heading East. We then managed to find the entrance. Luckily, due to Kaplan's speedy driving and the reliable Bentley, we didn't miss the marker by any seconds.

By the time we made it back to Bridgehampton we had driven for over five hours. I was groggy, but still managed to get a picture of our team. There were people hooting and hollering at the Historical Society as we exited our cars. Did we win the race? Well.....no, not exactly, but we had one hell of a ride

The Ex-Chancellor Explains

What It's Like to Have Your College Shot Out From Under You

By Alan Michael Braveman

Robert F.X. Sillerman is the former Chancellor of Southampton College, and a former member of the Board of Trustees of Long Island University. He is a music and media industry potentate who in the past year acquired 85 percent of the Elvis Presley Enterprises as well as acquiring the British company that owns the hot television property "American Idol" and its various franchises. He has stated that both he and his wife, Laura, will be available to remount the "All for the Sea" concerts to help defray some of the short term deficits encountered by Stony Brook.

The 12 years of concerts raised millions of dollars in scholarship funds for students who attended Southampton College and will be equally important to the Marine Science students attending the new college created by Stony Brook at Southampton.

Mr. Sillerman and this reporter had the following conversation:

Q. Long Island University recently stated that they "intend to lease back some of the campus buildings from Stony Brook to continue the Graduate programs now in place." Do you think this will work, or is the LIU name too tarnished on the East End?

A. I do not think it will work for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is that my understanding is that Stony Brook's interest is in owning and controlling the entire campus. They may accommodate LIU in some transitional period, but from what I understand an institution as prestigious and as successful as Stony Brook is not going to need or desire to have a 'tenant' for any sort of protracted peri-

I know that Stony Brook recognizes that they cannot be as distant as LIU was, and frankly, I don't think that they would make that mistake.

Q. Why do you think that Long Island University is so intent on keeping a presence in Southampton?

A. I am not sure that they are intent on keeping it. I think that as part of their overall communication to the community that they wanted to position the closing of Southampton College as not a 'total disappearance' from the East End. So I suspect the only way they could continue to accomplish that was to continue to teach some courses, which in fact they are attempting. So I suspect that it was, perhaps, grounded more as a desire to manage the communication than it was necessarily to offer the programs. Although the programs they offer are laudable. I don't know anything about the Homeland Security Program. But the graduate programs in education are needed and desirable and the graduate program in writing speaks for itself. So certainly it would be understandable that they would want to continue teaching those courses. Because they are valuable.

Q. Do you see a role for yourself in the future of Southampton Stony Brook?

A. I think that is a question that cannot be answered until Stony Brook and Long Island University complete their transaction. I have said publicly that to encourage Stony Brook as well as to help them defray deficits in the short term I will work with them and provide the necessary "oomph" to remount the 'All for the Sea Concert.' Past that, I have not had specific conversations with the Stony Brook people, thinking that it was much more important for them to concentrate their energies on getting the deal done. Once they complete the transaction there will be sufficient lead-time so that if they are interested in having Laura and me continue or become reinvolved. We can consider it.

Q. So when do you contemplate a new "All for the Sea" Concert could take place?

A. I suspect that it could be this summer but that may be optimistic. I do think that if there is a deal between LIU and Stony Brook it will be done by summer. But the backbone of the concerts was the hundreds of volunteers who took the place of a paid staff. Without those folks we would have severely limited the profitability of the concert, and it is possible that that volunteer base might not be available by the summer of 06. It would be nice if it was available, but I certainly hope that no later then the summer of '07.

Q. So at this point you have no ideas as to who might headline the Concert?

A. No, I think that I used to joke that it might be Elvis or The Beatles. I think I am in a better place to live up to my promise about Elvis. So other than a spontaneous appearance by the King I can't comment on that. It is way too early.

Q. Do you think that the unfinished Bishop-Burke Library will be completed if the Stony Brook-LIU negotiations are successful? Would you be involved in helping finish the Library?

A. Yes and yes...

Q. At the final Commencement for Southampton College this past May you stated unequivocally that 'Southampton College Alumni would always have a home on the campus.' How do you envision that coming to pass?

A. Well, it is my hope that, and I believe this to be the case, there are now approaching 10,000 Southampton alums out there who have a deep affection for the place, and that however the campus is named and however the transaction is structured that Stony Brook will take advantage of that. And that the best way to do it will be to obtain some continuity and that they will programmatically and attitudinally recognize this is not a start up but a continuation, and that Southampton College was operated by a distant administration. I know that Stony Brook recognizes that they cannot be as distant as LIU was, and frankly, I don't think that they would make that mistake. But I also think that they do realize that both the community and the alums recognize the importance of the college being a vibrant place and I think that Stony Brook will do what ever they think is important to embrace all the constituencies. And of course the Alums are a very important one.

Q. Do you think that the East End community will be more generous towards Southampton Stony Brook than it was during the 42 year stewardship of LIU?

A. I do. I think that this was a wakeup call and frankly, I think that there was an outpouring of concern and generosity in keeping this closure from happening. I think that there was some understandable concern about contributions that involved Long Island University. I think that with a fresh start the people who want the institution to be there will be much more forthcoming knowing that it will be part of Stony Brook.

Q. How do you think the Alumni as a group feel about Long Island University at this time?

A. It would not surprise me if the alums feel

Wainscott Bump in the Road May Derail Incorporation for Sagaponack

By David Stoll

If someone asked you where your house in the Hamptons is located, it is best to answer quite forthrightly, "I do not know." It seems that anytime someone looks at old records, boundary lines change. As the reader will recall from the summer news, a village trustee in Southampton Village had to step down because it turned out that his house was not located within the village boundaries as all had believed for years. Now, in another twist, it turns out that several houses thought for years to be in Wainscott are actually located within the new Sagaponack Village.

Defining the boundaries of Sagaponack Village seemed easy enough. The former hamlet has its own school and there is an officially-defined school district. The new village lines copy the school district lines precisely. These boundaries were used to determine who could vote on the question of incorporation and, after the landslide vote in favor, were sent to Albany for certification. Sounds reasonable, right? Well, a corrected set of boundaries has now been sent to Albany, delaying the official certification, because it turns out some century-old records show that several more houses were within the school district than anyone realized. Oops.

Here's what happened. There is a subdivision of homes at Town Line Road and Hedges Lane. Years ago, this subdivision was part of the Strong family farmland. The Strongs decided that it would be more convenient for their kids to go to school in Wainscott than in Sagaponack. That being a time of manners, no one objected, so the Sagaponack Strongs schooled in Wainscott. Later, when someone bought the farm (if you will) and created a subdivision, it was just assumed that the new homes were part of the Wainscott school district. After all, the Wainscott school was closer, and the Strong kids went there.

The thing is, though, that the boundary lines were never changed. The old Strong land is part of Sagaponack in every respect. So, the new Sagaponack Village will include these houses, and any kids who live there full-time will go to school in Sagaponack. Any homeowners in this subdivision who are registered to vote in Sagaponack were excluded from the incorporation vote, but given the 285-11 tally, it is most unlikely that even were those people included, there would have been a difference in outcome. Unless, of course, the people who put the Dunehampton petition together could find over 270 people in those few homes.

There has been yet another question about boundaries in recent memory, but one that had seemed entirely academic. When the Dunehampton effort became mired in litigation, two villages were proposed to stymie Dunehampton in case the proponents tried again (as they planned to with Southampton Sagaponack Beach): Bridgehampton. When Bridgehampton boundary lines were drawn, a dispute arose between Bridgehampton and Water Mill over the western boundaries of Bridgehampton. Never mind the signs on Route 27.

Given the success of the Sagaponack petition — most voters supported incorporation for no reason other than to prevent another Dunehampton — there is no reason for a Bridgehampton village, so it would seem that the Bridgehampton/Water Mill dispute is moot, as both hamlets are part of the Southampton Township. Unfortunately, some people in Bridgehampton have decided that they want a village too, even though Dunehampton is over. This is terrible news, indeed. The Southampton Township is split up quite enough, and we seem to moving towards placing all of the Town beach parking lots under the jurisdiction of parochial villages. Hopefully, the majority of Bridgehampton voters will decide to stay within the Township, rather than continue making the Hamptons map look like the former Yugoslav Republic.

The real story here involves the administration harming the family of a man named Joseph C. Wilson, a career diplomat, who was upset by something that President Bush said in his State of the Union Address in January 2003. At the time, Bush said that we had learned that Saddam Hussein was seeking significant quantities of uranium in Africa. Wilson wrote an op-ed piece that was published in the New York Times about it. Bush was totally inaccurate, he wrote. And he knew it was because he was the one that the administration had sent to Africa to find out about it. The administration reacted by letting it leak to the press that Mr. Wilson's wife, Valerie Plame Wilson, was a secret CIA agent. Columnist Robert Novak, a friend of the administration, wrote that fact in a column three days after Wilson's op-ed piece. This of course had a devastating effect on the Wilson family. Mr. Wilson ought to think twice about saving anything against the administration again.

Here is a timeline of the events in this story. In 2002, the administration heard a rumor that Saddam Hussein was seeking uranium in Africa. Vice President Cheney asked the CIA to find out if it was true. The CIA called in Valerie Plame Wilson about it, and she suggested they send her husband, the former Ambassador, to look into it. Ambassador Wilson went, learned this rumor was false and so reported that fact when he came back. Then the President said in his State of the Union message it was true and one of the reasons for us to go to war against remain silent.

After Wilson's Op-Ed, an aide to Vice President Cheney now approached the Vice President to tell him he had had many inquiries from the press and others about how Wilson came to go to Africa. How should this be handled? Cheney told the aide, who was Lewis Libby, to say that the CIA had asked Wilson to go and that the Vice President knew nothing about it.

At this point, somebody made a decision that the identity of Valerie Plame Wilson be made public. Libby told Judith Miller, who wrote an article (that never got published.) And President Bush's advisor Karl Rove confirmed it to a Time Magazine reporter named Matthew Cooper who did publish it. It is not clear who told Novak, but in his article as the first to "out" Mrs. Wilson, Novak says he got the information from "two senior administration officials."

A Congressional committee then said a law may have been broken when the name of Mrs. Wilson was revealed. They ordered a special prosecutor named and grand jury convened. And the grand jury subpoenaed Novak, Cooper and Judith Miller. Judith Miller, at this point, received a letter from her source, Lewis Libby, saying she was free to say it was he that told her. But unlike Novak and Cooper, who talked, Miller said she would not and she went to jail, since her refusal to tell a Grand Jury something is a contempt of court.

He never blinks. Behind those eyes lie sadness, compassion, indifference, joy, spite and mischief, sometimes many of these at once. Because of what he can convey with the slightest gesture or stare, actor Michael Caine works constantly. Most recently his patriarchal saucers have gazed at everyone from Christian Bale's to Nicole Kidman's Batman Samantha the Witch Vietnamese child-bride in the film version of Graham Greene's The Quiet American.

You might know Michael Caine is a knight, you might know that he has appeared in over a hundred films; however, you might not know that he is not Michael Caine. He was born Maurice Joseph Micklewhite in the charity wing of a London hospital in 1933. Actually he was knighted Sir Maurice Joseph Micklewhite, and not Sir Michael Caine, by the Queen of England in 2000. The actor had struggled during his early years taking small parts, many of them on stage, and acting under his given name. Along the way he dropped his laborious surname and adopted the name Caine after admiring a Caine Mutiny marquee. Early on a young Maurice Mickelwhite found his way to drama class quite by accident. As he tells it, he had followed a girl to her classroom and sat rapt against the door trying to catch a glimpse through the window. He leaned a bit too heavily on the door and it swung open, depositing him on the floor of what he soon found was a drama class, which he was invited to stay at. That is the story of how Michael Caine néé Maurice Joseph Mickelwhite fell into acting. When his first screen credit (for a documentary he had assisted with) flashed in a darkened theater in London, the audience sniggered, prompting the search for a pseudonym.

Some might forget that Caine was once seen as something of a hottie: one reason Jude Law must have been cast in the remake of Alfie is because he actually bears a striking resemblance to the young Caine. I swear. You need to see it. By the way, can everyone please appeal to the Blockbuster Video in Water Mill to stock the original Alfie? Currently they only have the Jude Law re-make, which, as terrible as it is overall, does have its own charms — specifically the considerable charms of Susan Sarandon and the Mick Jagger/Joss Stone soundtrack, but I digress.

When Alfie came out in 1966, it made quite a splash. The title character's direct-to-camera best actor nod for Caine.

In the late sixties and early seventies Caine starred in a procession of stylish pulp and spy films including such mod-classics as Get Carter and The Italian Job (both of which were recently remade, the former as a miserable

Stallone comeback attempt - which Caine appeared in — and the latter as a thinly veiled Mini-Cooper advertisement. Cementing the notion that this era was all about pulp, Caine even starred in a film titled Pulp. During this time, Caine was also once again nominated for a Best Actor Oscar, this time for his role opposite Laurence Olivier in the whodunit, Sleuth. In 1972, Caine married his second wife, Shakira. He knew he had to meet her after seeing her dance in a Maxwell House commercial. After asking around he found that in fact she lived right in London; she had stayed after coming to compete in The Miss World competition as Miss Guyana in 1968. The couple is still together and have one child.

Through the late seventies and into the eighties, Caine, as usual, worked steadily as an actor in many different types of films and met with success from a new generation of fans in romps such as Blame it on Rio and later Dirty Rotten Scoundrels opposite Steve Martin, He also appeared in more serious productions. In 1982 Caine starred in Deathtrap opposite Christopher Reeve, the first film he made in the Hamptons. A few years later he appeared in Sweet Liberty, directed by Bridgehampton's Alan Alda and also filmed in the Hamptons.

Michael Caine also has a part in the Hamptons' favorite fish story, Jaws, having starred in 1987's Jaws: The Revenge, the fourth installment in the shark movie series based on Peter Benchley's novel about a killer shark off the coast of the Hamptons. This time the shark follows the Brody family from Amity to the Bahamas, where Caine's character lives. When asked at the time why such a respected actor would appear in such trash, Caine reportedly said that any script that opens with his character standing on a beach > with a drink in his hand he agrees to do. Since then he has admitted that he's never seen the finished film, and says, "By all accounts it is terrible, but I have seen the house it bought, and it is terrific."

> Despite this self-effacing manner, Caine is a highly respected actor who has won two Oscars (both for Best Supporting Actor), one for Hannah and Her Sisters in 1986, and one for The Cider House Rules in 2000, and been nominated and awarded many other honors.

He has never had a problem justifying his choice of roles with his status as a fine actor. In his acceptance speech for his Best Supporting Actor Golden Globe for Little Voice he said he's "made a lot of crap.....and a lot of money," and betrayed by LIU, but each individual will make their own decision. There are those alums who feel a greater attachment to the campus and the land than to Long Island University. The Alums are attached to the "gestalt" of the Southampton College experience which had very little to do with Long Island University. So although it is absolutely true that the diploma says Long Island University I do not think that there is one alum alive that would say he has a diploma from Long Island University. They would say they have a diploma from Southampton College. And I think that if there is an opportunity to continue to feel that way then the efforts of Long Island University to revitalize their relations with the alumni will be difficult.

Q. Why do you think that Long Island University finally agreed to "make the deal with Stony Brook?"

A. Well, there are two things that made this happen. One, they were surprised when they went out to get valuations and appraisals for the land and the results were quite low compared to the numbers that were dancing in their heads. Secondly, I think that they were committed to doing a deal with a "not for profit" and preferably an educational institution. I do think that they deserve credit for sticking to it. Stony Brook as it turns out is the only suitor for the place. So it is somewhat a marriage of convenience to be sure but, on the other hand, we do have to recognize that the appraisals were lower, therefore their (LIU's) integrity did not have to be challenged. There was no moral issue of the possibility of selling it for more money to someone else. There was no one else. So they will have kept their promise and it will be an educational institution.

Q. So you believe that there is a genuine desire on the part of all concerned to see this to a speedy and positive conclusion?

A. Yes, there are still some hurdles to overcome, inspections etc, but I do not foresee any real problems.

Brooklyn Lobster is definitely a local theme, even if it doesn't exactly take place on the East End. The film follows a family-owned lobster business based out of Brooklyn. Danny Aiello and Jane Curtain star as the Giorgio family, whose lobsters are revered as the best in the state, but now they are going through tough times. The film explores the deterioration of a generational business as well as the inner turmoil of the family involved.

A film about legendary Metropolitan Museum of Art curator and Southampton resident Henry Geldzahler called Who Gets to Call it Art? will also be showing. It focuses on the man and the pop-art culture of 1960s New York. Two other films with East End connections are Protocols of Zion and Laura Smiles. Protocols deals with the issue of Jews being blamed for all the world's atrocities, but in this case behind the 9/11 attacks, while Laura Smiles focuses on the depression of an aspiring actress turned suburban housewife whose life increasingly skews from reality.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Relief

I was reading cnn.com the other day and read an extensive and fear inducing article about an incurable avian flu that is almost guaranteed to show up in my lifetime and kill everybody in the world. Okay, not everybody, but almost everybody. I was horrified. I don't want to die of an avian flu. I want to live, man. I want to live a long time and I don't want to ever think that getting an avian flu is possible. Why is this happening now? I feel like every day there is something new that can kill me. If you spend too much time in the sun, you are dead. If you have a one nightstand and aren't safe, you're dead. If you drink the water, you are dead.

My whole life I have been able to say to myself, "Well, there are a lot of things out there, but at least there isn't anything out there that can kill me just by my being outside."

Well, now that party is over.

This avian flu thing is serious, huh? They are predicting like a bizzillion people are going to die. Isn't that just great? I have been working hard my whole life, trying to do things to better society and myself and now I'm going to die from

What the hell happened to Ebola and SARS? Those were the good old days. Those were the diseases. We all made it, though. I guess I am relieved about that. I did worry a lot and I don't think that all that worrying was good for my health. I read somewhere that anxiety can kill you. I don't get why the news constantly has to tell me things that make me anxious and then the next day have an article that says that anxiety is unhealthy. Where is the logic in this? You can't tell someone that a giant avian flu is going to come out of chickens and kill us all and tell me that I am not supposed to get a little anxious. Am I supposed to hear that news and think, oh big deal?

I have been trying to figure out how other people cope with these dangers that are guaranteeing our doom. I think that I figured it out. They shut out the stuff that is scary and listen to the good stuff. My friend Peter called me this morning. "Hey, Dave, did you hear the news?"

"Yes, I heard the news! There is a super-virus that is coming out and is going to wipe out the human race as we know it.

What are you planning on doing? Are you going to live in a bubble? There is no way that I am going to live in a bubble man. I just can't do it. I can't live my life in a bubble. I think that I would rather be dead. Do you think that guys like you and me are safe from the avian flu because we are young and healthy and our immune systems are really strong? Maybe it will spare people like us. Like maybe we'll get really sick, but we'll recover. I'm kind of hoping that will be the case."

"What are you talking about?"

"The avian flu, dude! We are all doomed!"

"I'm not talking about the avian flu being the big news, you hypochondriac!"

"I'm not a hypochondriac, it was right there on the news. A new flu is going to kill us."

"Whatever."

"Okay so what is the big news?"

"Paris Hilton, man."

"Yeah, what about her?"

"She is breaking off her engagement. I just read it on the Internet. She is breaking off her engagement with the guy who has the same first name as her."

"Oh, my god, dude! Are they going to stay together?"

"They are saying that they are. But you know that it is just a matter of time until they break up. You can't say that you are going to get married then back out of it and then stay together. It is too traumatic.'

"Yeah, I think that you might be right."

"Oh, I am definitely right. She is going to be back on the market soon, I'm telling you.'

I suddenly started to feel a lot better about everything. He was right, there was probably a good chance that Paris Hilton was going to be back on the market. There is still hope.

Last Friday, at her press conference, when asked why she did not reveal Mr. Libby's name to the Grand Jury since she already had his permission, she said she did not feel it had been "freely given" and so chose jail. Now, after 84 days in jail, she said she had been assured by Mr. Libby that it had been freely given. So now she COULD reveal his name. Many people do not buy this explana-

Here are some things that could be made of all this.

Judith Miller, who before the War in Iraq wrote many inaccurate articles saving there WERE weapons of mass destruction in Iraq — the inaccuracies gleefully provided her by Iraqi dissidents with an axe to grind whose identities were protected by Ms. Miller —is a publicity hound.

It is a disgrace that the administration would lie to the American people about Iraqi uranium purchases in Africa in order to justify a war.

It is even worse that an administration, here in America, would personally try to ruin the lives of Mr. Wilson's family for his telling the truth, and it is incomprehensible to me that a reporter would want to protect, on principle, an administration that did that.

But maybe Judith Miller is smarter than we thought. In going to jail anyway, even though she didn't have to, even though she was protecting those breaking the law (that we protect the identities of agents) and even though it served no purpose since everyone know the agent at that point, she has brought to the attention of the public — big time the need for Congress to resolve, once and for all, the conflict between the Judicial Branch and the American Media about who has to say what. It also, in a backwards way, has put the lies of the administration on the map, in a way that it would not had Judith Miller cooperated in the first place.

This article is an example of that.

Only one question remains. Where is Valerie Plame now? And what name does she now go by?

now he'd like to sit back and choose the best roles. After his performance in Little Voice, Caine's career was revitalized from a relative lull, and more quality roles followed.

And in many of his most recent roles, if he is not actually playing a dad, he plays a father figure such as in Batman Begins where he played Alfred, the caretaker of the orphaned Bruce Wayne. There has always been a playful and droll humor to Caine, but he also brings a weight with him when he appears onscreen these days, whether in lighter fare such as Bewitched or more serious films.

His most recent dad-turn is in The Weatherman, where he plays Nicolas Cage's father. Watching him give that solemn look to Nicolas Cage, where he turns into the camera, unblinking and gives advice with such authority and conviction, telling his son what he needs to do with his life, you kind of want him to come to your house and do the same for you. You will have a chance to watch him in the movie, which is the closing night film at this year's Hamptons International Film Festival.

review: eric fischl

By Julia Nasser

Although a bit perturbed, I can't say I was surprised to see the "Sorry We're Full" sign Scotch taped to the door as I arrived to the Pollock-Krasner House last Friday evening. Eric Fischl was inside; of course we came in great numbers.

This was the last of a series of film nights hosted by Marion Wolberg Weiss, Dan's Papers art critic, in which artists present and discuss their most influential and favorite films. Fischl brought us Fellini's City of Women. These two demi-gods could crowd Madison Square Garden, let alone our local venue, which is, in fact, a wenue, which is, in fact, a kitchen. After some groveling, and the courteous yet reluctant of the courteou suburban wasteland, the ennui and discontent of motels, barbecues, family pets and swimming pools. His lost Eden pictures disconnected kids and grotesque parents, disillusionment, ambivalence and memorably poisonous sexuality. It is this cocktail of sentiments that have earned Fischl the sobriquet "painter laureate of American anxiety in the 80s."

It is true that Fellini's imagery is exceptional, startling and sharp. However, Fischl might have been describing his own work with these words.

In Fischl's later nudes, the body becomes a landscape, the paint becomes folds of flesh. It has been said Fischl revived the lyricism of brush stroke in a time when "painting was Unflinchingly focused on the subject of human relationships, Fischl depicts moments of human catastrophe about to happen. His work has been called "a celebration through melancholy" and in it we see a world complete with all its imperfections. His figurative work human depicts the undressed, with all the sags and wrinkles, scars and lumps, vet dashed out in beautiful and lyrical brushstrokes that harkens back to those long gone masters like Manet.

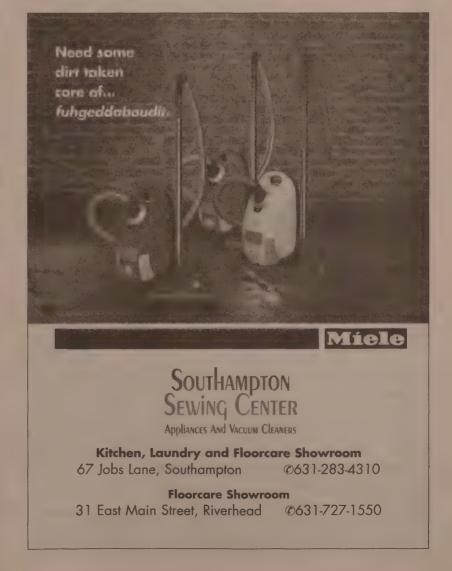

City of Women reveals a disturbed sexual atmosphere as well as a similar joy for humanity. The outrageous and controversial film investigates the feminist movement and relentlessly forces viewers to confront the same perplexing gap between the sexes that have always plagued us. We don't need to read Freud to understand the implications of the opening shot, a train heading into a tunnel, or the millions of apparent references that lead us through this carnival of women.

When we meet our dozy protagonist Snaporaz (Marcello Mastriani), he is amid a sea of bouncing breasts. There is a small room of jumping Lolitas nearby and a plump-lipped

"Blue moon.... you saw me standing alone...."

So I was walking to my car when I felt it hit...an acorn planted itself firmly in my chignon. Couldn't have landed more perfectly if it had been scripted. That's the third time I have been nearly impaled by acorns falling from far above me from tall oak trees. I learned that the Indians called this time of year the Moon of the Popping Trees, the time of year when oak trees attempt to kill people with acorns traveling at Mach One.

I checked www.geocities.com and found some other names for months from assorted Native American tribes. Not only are all of the names self-explanatory, but most are still accurate today!

JANUARY- Sun Has Not Strength to Thaw Moon; Old Fellow Spreads Bush Moon; Snow Drifts into Tepee Moon; Thin Moon

FEBRUARY- Moon of Melting Ice; Sucker Moon; Frost Sparkling in the Sun Moon; Boney Moon; Huddle Together Moon

MARCH- Catching Fish Moon; Snow Crust Moon; Buffalo Dropping Their Calves Moon; Sore Eye Moon; Wind Moon

APRIL -Wind Breaks Moon; Broken Snowshoe Moon; Ice Breaking in the River Moon; Frog Moon; Plant in Holes Moon; Geese Lay Eggs Moon

MAY- When Women Weed Corn Moon; Horses Get Fat Moon

JUNE- Green Corn Moon; Strawberry Moon; When the Hot Weather Begins µoon; Bulls Hunt Cows Moon; Fish Spoils Fast Moon

AUGUST- Corn Tassel Moon; Young Ducks Fly Moon

SEPTEMBER- Snow Goose Moon; Scarlet

OCTOBER- White Frost Moon; Moon of the Popping Trees; Striped Gopher Looks Back Moon; Harvest Moon; Long Hair Moon; Time of Poverty Moon

NOVEMBER- Freezing Moon; Hunting Moon; Deer Rutting Moon; Time of Much Poverty Moon; Turkey Moon

DECEMBER- Snow Moon; Wolves Run Together Moon; Young Fellow Spreads Bush Moon

I rather like the idea of months having descriptive names rather than some old Roman names. I thought of a few possibilities...

January: Moon of Bills and Weeping; Ice Blocks Ferry Moon; Big Party Moon; Aspirin Moon

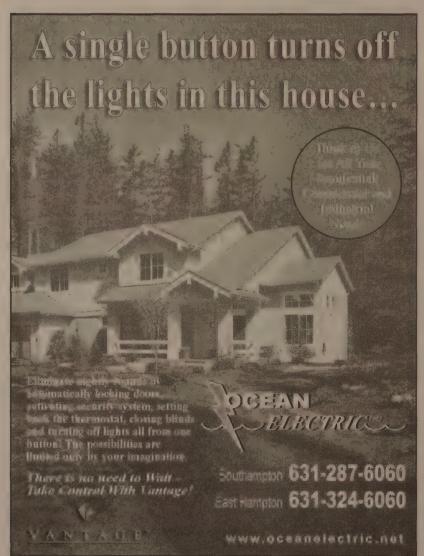

February: Big Snow No Go Moon; Chocolate Heart Moon; Jigsaw Puzzles Moon

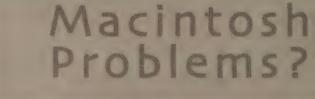

March: Wind Pushes Eyes Back in Head Moon; Chickens Lay Same Eggs Twice Moon April: Small Flowers Sweet Air Moon; Bunnies Lays Eggs Moon; Umbrella Moon; Moon of Arthritis; Advil Moon

May: Children Groaning Moon; Moon of Cleaning Closets; Moon of Redecoration; Martha Stewart Moon; Moon of Husbands Painting

It looks like 2006 will be a busy year for East Hampton's Renee Zellweger. The actress is set to star in the remake of the thriller The Eye, about a woman who gains supernatural powers after receiving a cornea transplant, to be produced by Tom Cruise and his partner Paula Wagner. Also on her schedule is Miss Potter, a biopic of Beatrix Potter, author of The Tale of Peter Rabbit, to be directed by Chris Noonan.

"JD and The Straight Shot" was the headlining band at the Stephen Talkhouse last Saturday. Turns out "JD" is James Dolan, CEO of Madison Square Garden and President of Cablevision. It seems he has been playing guitar for many years and put a professional band together a year or so ago.

Three-time Tony Award-winning producer, Stewart F. Lane of East Hampton, has written a new play called In the Wings which opened at the Promenade Theater in Manhattan on September 28th. The comedy, starring Lisa Datz, Josh Prince, Brian Henderson, Marilyn Sokol and Peter Scolari tells the story of the complications that arise when one actor gets a starring role in a Broadway show. and sultry passenger opposite him. The first words spoken in the film are "Nice Buns."

After Snaporaz unsuccessfully tries to seduce this buxom passenger in the washroom and then heedlessly follows her off the train, our somewhat lovable misogynist finds himself at a feminist convention. Where else would Fellini lead us?

What follows is exactly the fantastic imagined world that Fischl was alluding to, a circus scene saturated with estrogen and charged with feminist rage. Among these bra-burning feminists is everyone from militant, whipwielding man haters to soft-looking lesbians in unitards, roller-skating yogis and castrating Kung Fu ladies, even a woman with six husbands. The world is rich, textured and full, as Fellini's always is, and too, is Fischl's, as the audience noted after the film.

As the narrative proceeds, Snaporaz's odyssey goes from bad to worse as he is nearly raped by a sex-starved farm woman and taken on a joyless ride by a carload of doped-up joyriding teenage girls. In the end, he finds himself the guest of Dr. Xavier Zuberkock, a male chauvinist who is celebrating his 10,000th female conquest in his phallic-kingdom. The climax occurs as our worn down hero finds a long chute that leads to a grand and twinkling roller coaster. At this point the reader enters our protagonist through his lifeline of fantasy, his internal city of women. The crowd was cackling at the Pollock-Krasner house.

Fellini has been accused of chauvinism by many strong-minded feminists, yet most recall that these women are in fact the rulers of this world. Others have reminded viewers that Fellini is willing to poke fun at just about anything in this world — just ask the Catholic Church. I believe his own words reveal a reverence for women.

"Women are everything. I even see the cinema itself as a woman, with its alternation of light and darkness, of appearing and disappearing images. Going to the cinema is like returning to the womb."

Beyond a study of women, this film is a look at human relations.

These characters are personal. They are honest. They disturb and excite, force a viewer to look closely around and inside ourselves, as Fishl's do, showing us humanity with similar candor. What truly unites these two artists is their generosity, as Ms. Weiss pointed out. They give us a world where no one is left out. "Their texture is these characters. Each reveals the love and absurdity of beings."

A blue moon is a second full moon in the same month. "Pow, zoom, to the moon Alice!" means you have an imminent domestic crisis. "IN THE WINGS" OPENS

Bonnie Comley and Stella Productions premiered the new Broadway show, "In The Wings," an outrageously funny love story set against a theatre background by Stewart F. Lane, who is better known as a three-time Tony Award winning producer. The comedy opened at The Promenade Theatre in NYC this past Wednesday. Lisa Datz and Josh Prince are charming as aspiring actors struggling with their love for each other and a commitment to the theatre. Brian

Henderson as their fellow acting student has many amusing moments, but the incomparable Marilyn Sockol as a classic Jewish mother almost steals the show. Not to be out done, however, an over the top Peter Scolari is hilaious as the acting guru. "In The Wings" tells the story of the complications that arise when one actor gets a starring role in a Broadway show. With the show over, we were transported to Planet Hollywood in double decker NYC tour buses for the "seventies theme" opening night party. Bonnie and Stewart sure know how to put on a show. Raising Money For A Very Worthy Cause

Fundraiser for Hurricane Katrina At Martha Clara

By R.B. Stuart

Last Sunday in Riverhead at Martha Clara Vineyards, North Fork and South Fork wineries Bedell Cellars, Channing Daughters, Corey Creek Vineyards, Lenz Vineyards, Macari Vineyards, Paumanok Vineyards, Peconic Bay Winery, Roanoke Vineyards and Waters Crest all signed up to donate their wine and staff for a day of tasting, celebration and remembrance for the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

The benefit featured local live Blues & Jazz bands that also donated their time for the event and its wonderful cause. Ed Davis, who had the attention of the crowd throughout the day and kept everyone in good spirits, emceed the event.

The musical lineup was Bobby Sexton, Ken "The Rocket" Korb, The Mojos, Who Are Those Guys?, Vinnie Chills, Cadillac Moon and Todd

Wolfe. The music was a wonderful addition to the event and brought folks to the dancing area.

This event was not just about wineries and musicians donating their time and money however. Fire Departments from Riverhead, Jamesport, Mattituck, Southold and East Marion competed in a Gumbo Cook off where the firemen all had a great time trying to win the prize of best Gumbo. By the end of the cook off, the Riverhead Fire Department took home the honor of Best Gumbo.

Guests were invited to enjoy samplings of not only Long Island Wines, but also a barbecue with a Southern Creole theme from LI restaurants. From Smithtown, Famous Dave's coleslaw was crisp, crunchy, not too sweet and danced in your mouth. From Riverhead, the restaurant Buoy One donated mussels and had everyone panting for more. The Farmer Bar in Cutchogue had pulled pork with a snappy BBQ sauce on a homemade dinner roll, which was absolutely a Chefs Extraordinaire, located in Merrimack and New York City had 400 bite size crab cakes with a dollop of Creole remoulade that were gone in an hour. The wineries were also willing to dish out a couple of really great appetizers for the wonderful cause. Peconic Bay Winery Culinary Director Michael Meehan had the most elegant appetizer of BBQ spiced pork tenderloin with smoked tomato mustard and the cutest mini corn bread stick, cut as an ear of corn.

As if all of this giving were not enough, a dozen artists donated 18 pieces for a silent auction in which raffle tickets were sold. And by the end of the day with all the proceeds collected, HurricAID had pulled in $10,000, which will be matched by Martha Clara's owner Jackie Entenmann. The Bay Port and Blue Point Fire Departments donated a check to the Salvation Army in the amount of $21,925. If you feel moved to give it's not too late, you can always donate!

All of the proceeds from this event will go to the Bush-Clinton Katrina Fund and the Farm Bureau Hurricane Ag Fund. Both funds help with immediate relief as well as rebuilding and restoration efforts.

In addition, FedEx donated delivery of any items collected at the event. And The Salvation Army stood by with a truck they donated for the event to deliver the goods to the FedEx office in Newark, NJ.

Personal reasons were the driving force behind this heartfelt event. Martha Clara events coordinator and employee of three years, Bridget Quinn, is from Metairie, New Orleans. Her grandparents, uncle, mother and stepfather live in St. Bernard Parish and have lost everything. "The helpless feelings came before the storm, during the storm and immediately after," Quinn admits. "The levy was breached two times with Rita, flooding St. Bernard twice. It won't be inhabited for two years due to the oil leaks and benzene leaks. My family hasn't been able to go back to their homes. When I was a child there was a saying we'd joke about, the experts said in 50 years the city would be under water.....it rang true.

Quinn says they are hopeful New Orleans will recover, "The New Orleanian spirit is resilient. They're proud of their culture, food, music, celebration, friends and family. But I do think it's going to be different. It's been changed forever and has been through a lot. Will it be great, yes, will it be as great, probably not. New Orleans has a spirit of its own that no other city in the U.S. has," Quinn concedes.

"It adds a vulnerability to the city's spirit, as well as to the people of the city. We've seen storms and damage, but not at this type of scale," Quinn concluded.

Quinn's mission was joined by Dorothy-Dean Thomas of Corey Creek Vineyards. Her father is from the Mississippi Delta and was fortunate not to be effected. But she still felt the need to do something. "I had a very good friend pass away a week before the hurricane. I sat at home watching Katrina on the news, then woke the next day with my friend's eulogy repeating in my head, 'do justly, love mercy, walk humbly.' I thought he would have found something to do, so I called Martha Clara Vineyards and they were already preparing a benefit for southern culture. So I ran with it," Thomas ended.

If you would like to donate money through HurricAid, Bridget Quinn can be reached at Martha Clara Vineyard 631-298-0075 extension 13.

Desmond's Pub

The Inn at East Wind 5720 Rte. 25A Wading River 631-846-2335

However many times you drive into the grounds of The Inn at East Wind you cannot fail to be charmed by the beautiful buildings and the superbly groomed landscaped grounds. No wonder that each year over 500 brides and grooms come here to celebrate their weddings. East Wind also stages many other events, large and small, during the year. Inside, as you follow the signs to the restaurant, you are conscious of quiet elegance and this continues into Desmond's, named by owner Kenney Barra for the patriarch of his family. The restaurant is very well planned with tables being well spaced and angled to give diners a sense of privacy even when the restaurant is busy as it was even early on a Thursday evening.

Executive Chef Rich Laurelli has responsibility for all of the catering and restaurants with a number of kitchens in the buildings of this very large complex. His philosophy is one of perfection (in line with the rest of the operation). Ingredients must be of the freshest and best and each dish coming from the kitchens must be fully up to standard.

Rich sent out some tasting portions and we started with a truly excellent crab cake, full of crab, moist inside a crisp shell and served with a very tasty black bean salsa and a chipotle pepper sauce designed to allow you to infuse your choice of heat into each mouthful. Mussels came in a fresh herb marinara sauce redolent with garlic and perfect for use with an excellent selection of breads. Fried calamari were tender and not oily but we thought they could have been a little crisper. From the salads on offer, we chose the Desmond's chopped salad that was everything a salad should be, with a mix of tender young greens, gorgonzola cheese, pecans and cranberries perfectly dressed with a smooth raspberry vinaigrette. From what we saw, portions here are large, so one salad would almost certainly satisfy two normal appetites.

The a la carte menu is commendably concise and all dishes are prepared to order. We were delighted with a wonderful preparation of a superb piece of striped bass, pan-fried with an excellent citrus-based sauce and crispy-latticed potatoes. Also, broccoli rabe (regular readers will know this is not my favorite vegetable, by far) was exceptionally good. Rack of lamb is one of our all time favorites and the preparation of great New Zealand lamb (arguably the best in the world) with fennel seed and crusted in Dijon mustard was scrumptious.

Desserts live up to the standard of the rest of the menu. A piece of chocolate marquis cake had real depth of taste without being cloying or oversweet and a fresh berry tart brought an excellent meal to a close with good espresso coffee.

The motto of Desmond's is "Where you're only a stranger once" and there really is a sense of warmth and happiness about the place. You also are conscious that the passion and pride that Kenney Barra had in bringing this massive project to fruition is shared by the staff at all levels.

Desmond's offers a wide range of dining options from breakfast and Sunday brunch to Early Bird specials plus a very good value three-course prix fixe at $21.95 available Sunday through Friday. From the main menu, appetizers range from $7 to $9; main courses from $16 to $29 and desserts around $5. The wine list is also very sensibly priced with wines by the glass from $6, and bottles starting at $22.

Desmond's has developed into a restaurant offering a wonderful ambience with soft background piano music plus food that is extremely good and expertly prepared from first class ingredients. Whether you want to celebrate a birthday or other anniversary, hold a rehearsal dinner or simply want to enjoy good food, Desmond's is very highly recommended. By the way, if you are feeling guilty after a great meal, East Wind thinks of everything, for their luxurious spa, pool and fitness center is only a few steps away from the restaurant and offers all kinds of therapeutic and remedial treatments!

Solar Power Is A Reality

Business In Riverhead Offers Affordable Solar Technology

By Krystle Howell

Did anyone hear the news last Saturday about Long Islanders having to pay an increase of 18.1% on their LIPA rates? If you did then I'm sure that you wish you could find another means of powering your home. Well, I've got good news because there is one.

This past weekend I was able to be a part of the National Solar Tour and Green Buildings Open House of Long Island. This event was organized by LIPA and RELI, but took place at Gary Minnick's house, the man who owns Go Solar, a business in Riverhead that offers solar products to the public. Gary Minnick and Ron Schroeder, of the North American Board of Certified Energy Practioners, were very gracious hosts and showed me some awesome ideas and inventions for solar power.

Solar power or photovoltaic (PV), with the use of solar panels converts sunlight into electricity. It's a great energy source and it helps cut down on pollution, while saving money. I guess that's why some people have already started converting their homes to solar like my next door neighbor who claims, "I save one hundred and fifty dollars a month. It's basically my whole utility bill. My bill for the last couple of months was five dollars. I got the whole system with LIPA's rebate because I did all the work myself. It was all paid by LIPA. If you pay for it to be installed, then you would still be paying it off...for a couple of years. I love it. It's great. I use special inverters called grid tie inverters, which are tied to the power grid so I still use LIPA. On a bright sunny day I'm generating enough power so that the meter spins backward.

These systems also eliminate the use of storage batteries, which also saves money and storage space"

I also learned from Ron Schroeder and Gary Minnick that these systems are not that costly. For a three kW system, which generates around three thousand one hundred and fifty kilowatts an hour of electricity, would probably cost around twenty-two thousand dollars, but with rebates from LIPA and New York State would only cost the customer a total of about eight thousand dollars. LIPA is now offering an upfront cash rebate of four thousand dollars per kilowatt of PV capacity. Also, New York State is now providing a twenty five percent tax credit toward the total cost of a PV system. Thus, these systems are very economical

You get can get solar powered systems on your house, it is absolutely possible to do this today. There is a he business phone number for Go Solar is 727-2224

Solar power can also be used for other things as well. They had solar panels set up all along the driveway showing how it could not only power your home, but how it can power lawn mowers and ovens. There were demonstrations on how it could be used to power a water fountain or to heat water. I really liked the water demo. I was informed that the water was flowing through a series of three or four copper tubes about eight feet long, which were blackened to absorb heat. Ron Schroeder stated that, "this could support most of the homes hot water needs." I was amazed at how hot the water was getting; it was definitely hot enough to take a shower in. Christine Renna commented,

"It's amazing how powerful the sun is...we have five people to take showers.....we're always looking for ways to save energy.....looking for ways to save money.....we're impressed." Nevertheless, there wasn't only solar power to be impressed by. Besides the things shown there, solar power could be used to power boats and cars as well as to heat pool.

Now I was thinking that this was a great idea, but what about maintenance? If these were on my roof how would I clean them? Yet, Ron Schroeder told me that for maintenance, "The rain cleans it off. They don't go bad, hardly and degradation. I use them and I have some from twenty years ago that are still working." To learn more about solar power one can go to this website: www.lipower.org/cei/solar or www.gosolar.com.

Gary also had a demonstration of wind power through the use of windmills. He had a small windmill there that produced three hundred and fifty watts of power. Gary told me that, "It's often windy when its cloudy so it compliments the solar power in a grid and doesn't tap them out at all." They are also pretty quiet. Gary had a Power Point presentation that shows how much noise one of the larger windmills make and it's not noisy at all, which makes it people friendly. He also told me that, "Five hundred homes in Syracuse are powered through the use of only twenty windmills." Consequently, wind power is also an alternative power to solar that even works hand in hand with it.

Overall, solar power is an amazing source of energy and I hope to be seeing it around everywhere.

THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Get a "Taste" of a Busy Harvest Season

The frenetic pumpkin-picking season is upon us, and while the throngs of families in SUVs and minivans can make it that much more challenging to get around the East End, this is one of the most exciting times to visit Long Island's vineyards. Harvest festivals abound and wineries are filled with the intoxicating aromas of freshly squeezed juice fermenting.

Bedell Cellars, one of our region's most well-known producers, has much more going on than harvesting and fermenting the 2005 vintage. To upgrade both the winemaking process and the customer tasting experience, they've been busy making exciting changes to the facilities in Cutchogue.

To start, a new crush pad has been added that more than doubles the fruit receiving area, and the barrel room has also been expanded with 70 new barrels. But that's just the tip of the renovation iceberg, where 17 new custom-made stainless steel tanks with removable lids have been installed in the fermentation room.

"The previous closed top tanks necessitated the pumping of pumice (grape skins, seeds and juice) into the tank," said associate winemaker John Levenberg. "That pumping action generates a shearing force that shreds the grape skins and seeds, resulting in harsher tannins being contributed to the wine." These new tanks use gravity to fill the tank and are sized such that Bedell's winemaking team can focus on small-lot fermentations. Perhaps we'll see some single-vine-yard/lot bottlings in the future.

The most visible change is a brand new tasting pavilion that will open this weekend. Located next door to the indoor tasting room, the new pavilion offers magnificent views of the vineyard. It more than doubles the bar space, which was much needed.

If you're more interested in the wines than the venue, don't worry. I was able to taste some of the recent releases last weekend.

For every day sipping, Bedell Cellars offers Main Road White and Main Road Red table blends ($13.50). I found the white, a blend of Chardonnay, Riesling and Gewürztraminer, to be the superior of the two. Medium bodied, mouthwatering and filled with bright citrus and apple flavors, it demonstrates Bedell Cellars' blending talents. Each variety plays its part, and the sum is even better than the parts. If you're having a holiday party in the coming months, buy this by the case and it's sure to be as popular as an aperitif as with appetizers.

I thought the Main Road Red, which Bedell compares to Beaujolais, to be a bit substandard for a Bedell red. While packed with sweet berry flavors accented by bittersweet chocolate, the finish was a little raw in the oak department. Regardless, this blend of Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc is still wildly popular in the tasting room. Maybe it is better with food.

But the real luminary was the 1999 "TASTE" Red ($25), which is 100 percent Merlot. Refined and medium bodied, its fragrant nose offers sweet, smoky cedar, brambles and hints of white pepper and wet earth. Similar flavors are expertly balanced and silky smooth tannins and a delicious cherry-forward finish lingers. I think this wine would be best with food typically served alongside pinot noir — mushrooms, salmon and pork. It would be a great addition to a Thanksgiving table and the Barbara Kruger-designed label is a wonderful conversation piece.

For more information or to order wines from Bedell Cellars, visit www.bedellcellars.com or call 631-734-7537.

North Fork Artist of The Week

Painter, Max Moran

By R.B. Stuart

Max Moran considers himself a "brush in the bucket and paint on the palette" kind of painter, although his work is far from that. Moran was born and raised in Zenia, Ohio and since high school he has had the gift with a brush. As a teen, with the athletic department's commissions permission, he painted a mural on the gymnasium wall of his high school. The theme was representative of the school mascot, the Cowboys. His work drew praise throughout the school. However, with each praise that he got from his peers and from the coaches, he found that he got criticism from his art teacher. By the end of the mural's creation, a western mural of three cowboys on horses, had earned him three F's.

This not only surprised Max, but also devastated him. However, what was a devastation then, now at 45-years old, brings amusement to Max, as he realizes the work by such a young hand would eventually surpass that of his first severe critic.

"You can trust paintings to tell you about history. I wanted to understand and that's what led me to painting, to satisfy broad ranges of curiosity of my place in the world," Moran commented.

Moran comes from an Irish family of four siblings. His father's hobby as a folk art painter/sculptor was cut short due to World War II and his time as a soldier overseas. What his father was unable to fulfill, the son would. That became apparent when Max was awarded a scholarship to the Columbus College of Art and Design in 1977. Moran said, "College opened my eyes with the art community, giving me the language as how to operate in the art world."

When it comes to painting he says "It's just a part of you. Getting up everyday and being conscious inspires me as does art and other people's work. Sometimes you don't choose what to do, it chooses you. You'll know it because it won't feel right.....it will feel out of sync," Moran reflects. "Every time you go out to paint you have to get your hands dirty. And if you're not struggling, you're probably not doing something right,"

"It's all about enlightenment. Being more efficient with my projects and my time. There's a lot of material out there. One lifetime is not enough to explore. I'm always haunted by a quote, 'I wish I could have stayed with it," he concedes.

I talked further with Max, exploring whether there was anything in his life that he wished that he could change or redo. He explained to me that if there was one mistake from the past he could change, it would be, "When visiting a friend I wouldn't have parked my car on the streets of West Center Philadelphia. For my car with its entire contents was stolen. I lost most of my master slide portfolio, family photo's and other family heirlooms. It was one of the catalysts that that resulted in my moving to New York City," Moran con-

Moran moved to Mattituck 15 years ago, and each locale brings with it a new period of work. In Ohio he began with his most powerful and raw brush strokes, portraits. On to New York City where he painted storefronts, capturing the romantic aspect of daily life on the city streets, as one sees depicted on the streets of Florence, Italy. His move to Cape Cod would allow him to paint the beauty of seaside living in landscapes, which carried him to Long Island where he continues as a plein air painter, but adding rain to his canvas. The rain series engages you as it captures your gaze, fixating you into a trance, the rain washes over you. At some point maybe he will come back full circle to his first love of portraits.

In 2002 Moran showcased his "Manhattan Rain Series," and the Bentley Publishing Group took notice and recently introduced a reproduction poster of "Waiting for a Cab-Park Avenue," to the international art publishing market at Art Expo New York. The poster ranked #71 in Bentley's Top 100 list in just six months of its release, winning 30,000 other art posters Needless to say, Max Moran knows art. You can see his work on the North Fork, too, if you get the chance. He has some work on display at Martha Clara Vineyards in Riverhead or you can see a collection of his work at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center, which will unveil his paintings at a cocktail reception on Sunday, October 9 from 3 p.m. - 5 p.m., on display through January. They can be reached by calling 631-288-1500. To view his current work visit his website at www.maxmoran.com or contact him directly at artofmax@optonline.net.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Life is Art at the Parrish

This Saturday great masterpieces will be realized in the flesh at The Parrish Art Museum's Beaux Arts Ball. After a ten year hiatus, this once cherished tradition is back by popular demand. Guests are invited to dress as their favorite artwork and raise a glass to the efficacy of human invention.

The tradition of Beaux Art Balls is not a new one. These masquerade festivities have been practiced for centuries, in fact. An 1880s account of this event describes the Beaux Arts de l'ecole, the university in which this festival was popularized. The day included a parade along the Seine River, a riot and revival of paganism with half-naked men and women riding down the river on floats, striking statuesque poses. It was called by the observer as "a hymm to beauty, a living explosion of the senses and emotions." In modern times, these balls are less scandalous, and are usually elegant costume galas in homage to the arts.

The Parrish Art Museum joined this Beaux Arts tradition by creating this ball in which guests from all over the East End will flock clad in all sorts of materials from Victorian frocks to bubble wrap. Costumed as their favorite work of art, the guests celebrate the creative spirit so rampant in the East End.

In past years, a slew of impressive masterpieces attended this event, including Da Vinci's legendary "Last Supper." Each disciple sat around Christ in perfect formation, every gesture recalling Da Vinci's fresco with flawless precision. Other artworks in attendance were Picasso's "Guernica" and Pollock's "White Lavendar."

Getting into the (holy) spirit at a past Beaux Art Ball

We have been discussing the possibilities for weeks at Dan's Papers and the ideas have become slowly more outlandish. Recently Twombly's scribbles have been suggested, pieces from the Cubist period, and also Bosch's nightmarish world portrayed by critters, demons and little beasts attached to wires that would be attached to some unfortunate party goer's body. One of us suggested he could just cut off an ear like Van Gogh rather than buff up to be "David" as he had previously planned.

The decision is daunting, the project as well, and the choices seem endless. They are endless. One might pad themselves with pillows to become one of Botero's portly beings or perhaps come with fangs and cape to haunt the ball as one of Goya's dark beasts. I guarantee there will be a team of Mona Lisas, Christs, some Degas dancers and the like. Perhaps a brave soul will become Michaelangelo's vision of God as pictured on the Sistine ceiling. The postmodern types will be understated and clever in their Ad Reinhardt black on black depiction.

This weekend life will imitate art.

Most think of a work of art as tempo-rally bound, fixed and unchanging. At this Ball one can see these flat characters take form. Come liberate the static ghosts of the two-dimensional world from their frames for an evening of drinks and dancing. There is nothing as freeing as masquerade and doesn't it seem time for a little celebration? Let's remember the good things human hands have done throughout time. Festivities begin at 7 p.m. and tickets cost $20/$10 for members. The Parrish Art Museum is located at 25 Jobs Lane in Southampton.

MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

The Greatest Game Ever Played

Following on from his creepy 2001 effort, Frailty, actor Bill Paxton returns to the director's chair with the story of young golfer Francis Ouimet (Shia LaBoeuf) who beat the reigning champion Harry Vardon (Stephen Dillane) in the 1913 US Open. Although unlikely to convert those who find the game of golf dull as ditch water, for fans Paxton, has created an authentic and solid tribute to a sporting legend.

Into the Blue

Arriving somewhat late in the game given its summery subject matter, this action thriller from the director of Blue Crush sinks rather than floats. Following the misadventures of the delectable shark-bait couple Jared (Paul Walker) and Sam (Jessica Alba) as they attempt to take sunken treasure from the hands of a drug baron, this is a predictable plod through every watery cliche in the book.

The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio

Julianne Moore has the face of a classic movie goddess and so it's great to see her reprise the role of a fifties housewife that worked so well in both Far From Heaven and The Hours, in this lightweight but lovely family drama. Moore's Evelyn Ryan is a mother of ten who enters various jingle-writing contests in order to support her family while the ever-solid Woody Harrelson stars as her volatile and depressed husband.

Serenity

The weird and wonderful world of Joss Whedon, the creator of Buffy The Vampire Slayer, returns to the big screen in this movie adaptation of his cancelled show, Firefly. Sci-fi fans have been raging ever since it came off the air but this satisfies in all the right ways: the cast are young and pretty, the jokes come thick and fast and the plot veritably crackles along. A sequel seems assured.

In Her Shoes

In this adaptation of Good in Bed, author Jennifer Weiner's chick-lit novel, party-loving Maggie (Cameron Diaz) clashes with her frumpy sister Rose (Toni Collette) and the two come to know their long-lost grandmother Ella (Shirley Maclaine). This is far less terrible than it sounds and while light, fluffy and sit-commy in all the right ways, excellent turns from all three actresses makes this a cut above the date-movie formula.

Two for the Money

Matthew McConaughey stars as a college football player who falls back on his ability to predict the outcome of games when he is injured on the field. Al Pacino steps in to exploit said talent and take McConaughey to the top. But of course, the gift falters, the relationship sours and so on and so forth. Dull, drab and predictable, this serves mostly as another milestone in the fall of Pacino. More Gigli than Godfather.

Waiting...

In the style of Clerks, writer-director Rob McKittrick's debut feature follows a day in the lives of the waitstaff at Shenanigan's Restaurant. The cast is mostly up-and-coming Young Hollywood (Brokeback Mountain's Anna Farris for instance) but it is Luis Guzman who steals the show here, proving himself one of the great character actors of current American cinema. Though indulgent, this is a solidly enjoyable adult comedy.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Animator Nick Parks brings back the cheeseloving Wallace and his long-suffering dog Gromit in this sequel to the much-loved The Wrong Trousers. Though it can be twee and irritating in all the ways that British comedy can be, this never distracts from the ingenuity of the plot or the beauty of the animation itself. The least painful way to take the kids to the cinema since Shrek.

Guy de Fraumeni In The Hamptons

The early movie mogul Sam Goldwyn is now best remembered for "Goldwynisms," his unwitting, innocent twists of the English language like, "A verbal agreement isn't worth the paper it's written on." Nonsensical? We used to think that if something was in "black and white" it was as reliable as if chiseled in stone. However, "chiseling" now refers to chipping away at honest actuality. The news, though in "black and white," has become "colorful." This has allowed radio, television and print commentators the privilege once reserved for politicians. By accusation, innuendo or downright falsehoods they can tar and feather or lynch (metaphorically) their political targets. Press releases for George Clooney's incisive black and white film, Good Night, and Good Luck was made in response to attacks of this kind on him.

Good Night, and Good Luck recalls the early, defining years of television as it moved on from radio. It chronicles the Cold War years of CBS News' integral star of integrity, Edward R. Murrow, who had eloquently broadcast so vividly, without the assist of TV cameras, Hitler's horrific bombing of Britain. He did this with such reserved style and grace, but how would he deal with TV's penetrating lenses, very hot lights and cameras and inflaming witch hunters who were igniting fear with scare scorching blow torches fueled by reactionary political greed? It happened that television loved Murrow's lean, forthright and believable qualities and the gluttonous oppressors of the country's ideals would grow to fear him.

William R. Murrow would sign off his shows with "Good Night, and Good Luck." He had used it during the war years in Europe where he and a cadre of foreign correspondents he had assembled kept CBS News bristling with a warm but no-nonsense journalistic prose style, inspired by Murrow, that became the standard. That band of newsmen went on for years as gentlemen we trusted and liked. Murrow's impact was great. However, it was as nothing compared to his taking down the powerful Wisconsin

Good Night, and Good Luck

Senator, Joseph R. McCarthy, who had the nation shaking with paranoia - even threatening to shake up the U.S. Army.

The present day similarities are not particularly stressed. The clarity of its black and white historical gravity is what gives this film its remarkable resonance. As produced, co-written and directed by Mr. Clooney (who also co-stars), the film glows with cigarette smoke backlit by accurate set pieces and clothing of the time. With chilling effect, it recreates the anti-communist smearing of the right wing's chosen enemies, one of whom was Murrow. He was losing sponsors and, fortunately, his boss William S. Paley stood by him. It will be remembered that Murrow performed in commercial entertainments as well, for CBS, in order to cover the expenses of a freedom of expression broadcasting capability which allowed him to vent outrage for the denied have-nots and indecently oppressed who were invisible to a complacent 1950s. He focused TV and a conscience on them.

With dedicated associates, his producers and reporters, he rigorously pursued understanding, compassion and justice.

Good Night, and Good Luck has the authenticity and urgency of a well-paced documentary. It almost never leaves the CBS offices and studio. It doesn't have to. The lives of the news people are encompassed by their jobs. Some scenes are in the local bar, but they are merely extensions of their work. Murrow's advocacy is uncannily portrayed by David Strathairn, cigarette in hand, close to his face, wryly drawn, squinting with smoke and imperturbability. Fred Friendly, Murrow's executive producer and partner, is done without ego by Mr. Clooney - he is made-up to look puffy and overweight. Robert Downey, Jr. and Patricia Clarkson play Joe and Shirley Wershba. Frank Langella is a marvelous Paley. However, the performance that is absolutely stunning is that of Senator Joseph McCarthy. He plays himself. Using actual film footage of the destructive Red-baiter is pure genius. No one could have so condemned him as he does. Perfectly in synch with the rest of the film, the raw, flaring black and white exposure of the bully is as devastating to himself as he was to the nation.

William R. Murrow had warned the TV industry of its power or, its denigration to "a box of light and wires." Mr. Clooney's film reminds us that the media can be the voice of America the beautiful or, the polluted contamination of our rights by those who misuse it for profit or power.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

JURIED EXHIBITION AT THE PARRISH MUSEUM

There's much to commend the Thirty-Ninth Juried Exhibition at Southampton's Parrish Museum. Of course, there are bound to be people who don't agree with all the selections, but such disagreement comes with the territory.

Differences of perception are common as well. A viewer swore that there were more representational pieces on display. This critic recalls more abstract works. No matter. Diversity is the name of the game here, the single most prevalent quality; it's a principle that's pretty predictable in juried shows especially when the jurors have varied tastes. Something would be strange indeed if figurative forms, for example, predominated.

Diversity comes in many shapes: first, materials. Christa Maiwald's hand-embroidered cotton floss and thread portraits are real standouts, as they always are when similar pieces by Ms. Maiwald are shown. This time, however, we like the adult subjects she has chosen: an homage to both Florence Nightingale and Florence Lynch, her art dealer. Quite a quirky comparison.

Gunter Stern's "Helen," evokes the same quirky quality with the use of sand on canvas. Pam Topham's tapestry, "Water Music," which was featured on a recent Dan's Papers cover, is equally mesmerizing.

Naomi Grossman's wire configurations, voted Best of Show, are also arresting, the wire forming words like "Hold Me" and "Touch Me" in the "Assisted Living" work. It is not the material, however, that moved yours truly, but the connotation that the words suggested: an aging relative's whispered thoughts entrapped in both a lonely place and state-of -mind.

There is also diversity in media, including Dan Gilhooley's black pencil on paper. It's the first time this critic has seen an image other than a representational portrait from this artist, and it is his most striking work so far, primarily because we cannot identify the subject.

"Chain Zone" by Pat Field

While Ruth Waldman uses colored pencils for "Bridesmaids," her turkey metaphor is quite apt, amusing and identifiable.

Niki Berg's photographic essay of a dying man is striking as well, due to the subject matter. It's a loving narrative and one that took courage to create. We wonder what the same piece would look like if it were done in a more stylized mode.

Pat Field's photographs ("Patriot Zone" and "Chain Zone") also make us wonder: what are these images? (It turns out, they are street markings.) The fact that the context is missing makes the works all the more interesting.

No critique can fully do justice to all the fine, varied works in this show. Pardon us if we merely took a random sampling.

The show will be on view until Oct. 23.

ISSUES

Camp Hero

Time travel, aliens, and mind control were not what I had in mind when I met the East Hampton Trail group for the Camp Hero walk. After all, the description of the hike was: "Natural beauty combined with man-made structures of historical interest makes this a unique hiking experience.'

We started our hike at Camp Hero Road in Montauk. This is the last public road off of Route 27 before you reach the Montauk Lighthouse, 1.5 miles east of Theodore Roosevelt County Park and a short distance past the Oyster Pond overlook. The Trail entrance is on the west side of the road, 100 yards south of the intersection with Montauk Highway. After walking a couple of hundred yards on an access trail, the hiking group turned left onto the Paumanok Path. This portion of the Paumanok Path is known as the Point Woods Trail. In my opinion, this is easily the most beautiful trail on Long Island. We crossed over a small brook on a wooden footbridge and continued east on the Path.

This maritime forest is unique because it is protected by a natural depression and has seen little recent disturbance from people. The depression and the high bluffs that face the Atlantic Ocean protect the trees and shrubs from being stunted by the salt laden winds blowing off the ocean and bay. I don't think there is another place on the Island that has such mature laurel and holly, and there are few places where you can find such large specimens of black tupelo, beech, shadbush, and red maple.

This was a sunny day, but because of the dense tree canopy above, the group of hikers was walking in a shadowy rainforest-like environment. Fern, spicebush, and bayberry surrounded us as we threaded our way though freshwater wetlands. In many places the trail tread is made bumpy with aggressive roots, while in other places it is a soft carpet of leaf litter. The exceptional quality of the trail itself is largely due to the initial planning of a well-known naturalist, Mike Bottini. This trail hugs the contours of the land and takes the hiker gently up the slopes. Not only does this type of trail make for a comfortable walk, it also causes the least impact on the environment. Mike describes the Point Woods Trail as well as other East-End trails in his book Trail Guide to the South

Shortly after walking through a field of boulders, we came upon some red markers on the trees indicating the way to the Battery 112 Trail. We turned left (north) onto what appeared to be a road being reclaimed by the woods, and then we turned right (east) onto the 112 Trail itself. When we reached Battery 112, we all stood before the bunker, now sealed off with a cement wall. Then our hike leader, Steve Tamber, began to read an article about a group of hikers that disappeared after walking through Camp Hero on All Hallow's Eve. Steve spoke of mind control and aliens. The hiking group was enthralled. As he finished reading, the audience realized that Steve was jesting. This resulted in a lighthearted mood among us for the rest of the hike.

Steve led us along the Battery 112 Trail to Camp Hero Road, and then onward to the Col. Daniel Wolf Road. Here we stopped to use the rest stations. We continued on Camp Hero Road and then headed south on the Col. John Dunn Road to Old Montauk Highway. If instead of visiting Bunker 112 we had continued on the Paumanok Path, we would have found ourselves here as well. This is significant, because if you continue a short distance east there is a paved road running south to the Atlantic bluffs with their beautifully carved faces and a dramatic view of the Ocean. We then walked back from the bluffs, along the Paumanok Path to the Point Woods Trail and arrived at Camp Hero Road where we had parked our cars.

If you wish to enter the Camp Hero Main Entrance, you have to pay an admission fee, but in return for the fee you will receive an excellent map and you can drive your car around much of the facility. The road heading south from this point takes you to a parking area located further east along the Paumanok Path than where we entered it on the hike. You will find the main entrance by passing the Lighthouse and looking for a fork on the left side of road, leading south.

LASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

We call them dashboards, the British call them facias, in airplanes they're called panels, and on boats you can take the helm and look at the binnacle. Whatever expression you use, it's the place where instruments are mounted in most modes of transportation. The name dashboard, coined around 1850, comes from the board that was placed in front of a horse-drawn carriage to deflect mud and dirt. What has me on this week's rant about dashboards is that recently I've seen several stunning new cars with dashboards that put style ahead of practicality. All three of these cars are popping fresh.

The first car is the new 2006 Honda Civic coupe. Yes, the little Honda Civic, once the Green Peace poster car, has morphed into a fast and furious hottie of a ride. The new body is absolutely gorgeous and looks more like it was penned by a German design department than a Japanese one. The SI version of the Honda coupe has a high performance 2-liter engine that produces 197 horsepower at 7,800 rpms with a racecar-like compression ratio of 11 to 1. If these numbers don't mean anything to you, let me just say that just a few years ago this was the kind of power that formula cars were producing. Here it is in a street machine that will last to 150,000 miles. The only more powerful four-cylinder street car engine in the world is in Honda's other products, the S2000 sports car and the Acura RSX-S. With the Civic, one gets this powerhouse engine in an entry-level product.

That's the good news about the new car. The bad news is the gimmicky dashboard. What Honda has done has put a digital speedometer in one's line of sight, right under the lower frame of the windshield, with a digital gas and temperature gauge surrounding it. Way below it, in what Honda calls a" two-tier' instrument panel sits the analogue tachometer, awkwardly far from the speedometer. The whole mess is creative, but visually confusing. There is a shift light on the digital speedometer that tells when the red line is reached but why? That's what tachometers are for. This is a real driver's car so why not put in instruments for serious drivers, and as Dr. Porsche once said, not a dashboard that looks like "Tokyo at night."

The other two cars that have hard to see dashboards are beautiful cars, too. They are the new Pontiac Solstice and the new Ford Mustang. They both have instruments that are recessed in dashboard pods. On the Mustang I drove I could hardly see them in daylight and the same goes for the Pontiac Solstace. Just because instruments were recessed in some cars during the fifties and sixties and couldn't be read then, why recess them now? Improve on retro, don't copy it.

When driving fast, the last thing I want to do is try to figure out what the hell my car instruments are trying to tell me. Racecars don't even have speedometers, they just have a big analogue tachometer visually barking at you. Some Formula One cars are going digital, but I believe that's because their engine management systems are so high-tech and sophisticated that it's easier and less failure prone to stay all elec-

The older sports cars of the fifties and sixties had wonderfully easy to read dashboards. All the instruments were white letters on black faces, which I still feel are the easiest to read. There also seemed to be a lot of information. Oil pressure was in numbered gauges, not like the green and red ones on the cars today. The early Jaguars had a nifty button next to the oil pressure gauge that, when pressed, told you the amount of oil in the engine. There were water temperature gauges, in Fahrenheit or Celsius, and a real battery charger instrument that told you if the generator was working. Most of today's cars have very few instruments on the dash. Believe it or not, the one vehicle I can think of that is well instrumented is the Ford pickup truck. It has virtually every instrument in bold easy-to-read analogue gauges. It's also the best selling vehicle in the world.

I like instruments. I like panels on airplanes. I like the chronometric dials of the old Porsche racecars. I like the large pie-face sized instruments of the early Italian cars. I like the painted dashboards of the fifties German cars with simple-to-read instruments that were set in chrome beveled glass and had the appearance of fine clocks. I also loved the look of the paintedto-look-like-wood dashboards of the thirties and forties Fords. Stunning.

As far as razz-a-ma-tazz goes, the jukebox dashboards, like pop art, are a pure American art form. Many were beautiful, but impractical. Try driving a 1959 Cadillac Eldorado convertible on a summer's day with the sun over your shoulder. The chrome dashboard became a klieg spotlight aimed at your face. But that was another era, a great one for American automobile design.

That was then. Now cars are seriously fast, even little Honda Civics. Do whatever you want with the body designs, but use the KISS principle when designing a dashboard. It should be simple, visible and function-

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Pre-empting Halloween

I'm back from Aruba and have answered for my friends, acquaintances, and family all the requisite questions about my wonderful honeymoon, excellent wedding, and the very little I learned about Natalie Holloway. Nancy Grace and all her helmetheaded glory can roll her eyes and explain it all a lot better than I can. If not-ask Greta Van-Susteran. With that said, we can slide back into normal life and get about our business of entertaining ourselves here on our own American soil. October is underway and if you're anything like me, getting on top of the great and grueling Halloween costume chore is a must. If I get it together at all, each year I find myself clamoring for the right components at the last minute. Usually, with no disrespect to our local merchants. I fall short of finding everything I need and end up settling or giving up altogether. As Alex from A Clockwork Orange, everything was perfect save for the hat—I bought one that didn't really fit. As Mickey from Natural Born Killers, I couldn't find a shoulder holster. There's always something missing. In our small towns, nobody can carry everything. Luckily, Manhattan isn't far away, and with a bit of prior planning we can find just about anything imaginable.

The city obviously has many stores to choose from, but the real treat is finding those specialized businesses that focus all their energy on Halloween or costumes for any occasion where one might be in need. Halloween Adventure in the East Village is probably the greatest one stop shop for all your masquerading desires. They have more square footage than any Halloween shop in Manhattan, and carry everything from vampire teeth to expensive full-fledged getups. The employees wander the store in costume and the atmosphere channels the fun of the holiday, every day. Creativity will usually win those contests at our favorite clubs and bars, and Halloween Adventure's plethora of accessories and masks make it easier to put together something interesting. Some friends of mine won at NV a couple of years back, and their prize was a wonderful day sail leaving out of Sag Harbor the following Spring. The sun was shining and the cocktails flowing. They were nice to take me along. Good costumes can reap good rewards. Halloween Adventure is located at 104 Fourth Ave. between 11th and 12th Streets, (212) 673-4546.

If you're less interested in winning creativity contests and more concerned with wearing something that will put you smack in the role of a favorite character, some of the more expensive costume shops and rental outfits can help. You'll forget that you're not the princess or pirate you've become for the night. Maybe your wife or husband or boyfriend or girlfriend will too. Sound good? Creative Costume Company in the Garment District is loaded with stage-worthy and couple friendly costumes like Marie Antoinette and Louis XVI, Scarlett and Rhett, or JFK and Jackie. Rentals run anywhere from $35 to $300 for the week of Halloween. They're located at 242 W. 36th Street, 8th floor between 7th and 8th Ave. Call (212) 564-5552. Also check out Dodger Costumes. Their Chelsea warehouse boasts one million handmade items for rental including suits of armor and the original donkey mask from The Man of La Mancha. The retired theater costumes and accessories have been in major hits and retain the feel of Broadway history. Dodger is by appointment only. Contact them at (212) 620-2799, or visit dodgercostumes.com.

Look around, these are just a select few of the large selection of excellent venues to get outfitted for the scariest night of the year. If you're feeling in the mood, a very touristy and sort of silly place to go that conjures the spirit of Halloween is Jekyll and Hyde Pub (or "Club" in Midtown) in the Village. The food is nothing to write home about. It's pretty overpriced and the place can have lines like the Hard Rock Café, but it's a goofy good time if you don't take yourself seriously. Like a good, cheesy horror movie set, there's a lot to look at, cringe about and laugh at. Look it up. In the meantime, start planning that costume or prepare for the inevitable size 8 hat on your size 9 head.

Dan's Shopping 100% Wool

All reports say that tweed is back in style. The wise know it never went out. After the linen blazers, Nantucket reds, and seersucker suits are dry cleaned and stored in the back of the closet until next summer, the fashion savvy turn to tweed to jumpstart their autumn wardrobe and although couture designers are incorporating tweeds from across the UK (including Chanel's use of Linton Tweed) no one does tweed better than the Scots. And nowhere is this more obvious than with Harris Tweed

Before we go forward, a little geography lesson. The Outer Hebrides, which includes the Isle of Harris and Lewis as well as the Isles of Uist and Barra, is located off the northwestern coast of mainland Scotland. Although Uist and Barra are separate islands, Harris and Lewis are actually one island. There is an imaginary line through the island that originally delineated the property lines of the Harris and the Lewis families. Now it separates Harris and Lewis.

Harris Tweed has long been heralded as one of the finest tweeds in the world and for its ruggedness, durability, and classic looks, this holds true. Traditional patterns including herringbone and houndstooth were done in basic muted colors with natural vegetable dye. Tweeds were originally made to weather the harsh climate of Scotland and its isles. The Outer Hebrides sit in the midst of the cold North Atlantic Ocean. The climate is unforgiving, the winds stiff and the landscape almost bare save for tall grasses and the occasional tree. Tweeds and thick wool garments were one of the major survivor tools in their rough climates.

The weave was thick wool, woven on wooden looms by hand. Harris Tweed and most higher quality tweeds are still woven on machines by "hand." In fact, the Harris Tweed Act of 1993 demands it, stating: "Harris Tweed is cloth that has been handwoven by the islanders of Lewis, Harris, Uist and Barra in their homes, using pure virgin wool that has been dyed and spun in the Outer Hebrides."

Handwoven today means by peddle-powered machines. The task of laying out the yarn for a particular weave can take several hours and for more complex weaves, days. The peddle-powered machines summon up ideas of the old counterfeiting machines you'd see in movies. These cast iron monsters are loud and for those weavers who work on them for their entire lives, can actually lead to hearing loss. It's a small price to pay for carrying on a tradition that has defined the land and employed these families for hundreds of years. The Harris Tweed industry is still based out of independent weavers' homes and workshops and because of that, the Harris Tweed Authority is an overseeing body that monitors quality for all of the weavers. But the weavers themselves actually deal as both members of the Authority and as individual weavers.

Although there have been some tough times for the tweed weavers of the Outer Hebrides, others, like the Mackay family, have made great strides in the past few years. Just last year the Mackays signed a deal with international shoe magnate Nike to produce Harris Tweed sneakers.

More classic clothing companies like Brooks Brothers are also reinvesting in the time-old tradition. This year they will be offering several tweed sports coats in herringbone, Crow's Foot, and Deco designs. But for those who think wearing Harris Tweed means you have to look like a stodgy college professor, think again. Bright colors like yellows, oranges, and even pinks are being incorporated into the designs. It's a new spin on an old tradition. If you're looking to buy proper Harris Tweed, look for the sign and the trademark Harris Tweed Orb on the label.

Dan's Shopping Made in Jail

A few years ago a strange ring caught my eye. Actually, it wasn't as much the ring that grabbed my attention but the tiny photograph peering at me with dark hooded eyes and Mona Lisa smile. "A prison ring," the sales woman said, "It's made from a toothbrush. Perhaps my bewildered expression urged her to explain further.

In the 1930s toothbrushes were made of enamel, and resourceful prisoners, with a good deal of time on their hands, filed them into rings. "They put pictures on them, of movie stars or loved ones or cartoons. "This must have been his girlfriend, maybe his sister," said the antique-collector.

I bought the ring without hesitation and for the two years I had this beloved object, I carried this woman with me. Many thought it strange. "You're wearing around some guy's ugly girlfriend," a friend brought to my attention, "and it might have been made by a serial killer." My intrigue only grew as I imagined the dark possibilities.

I had this ring in mind when I volunteered to write a fashion article. I hoped to learn about prison rings, to find some heart wrenching or scandalous criminal love story. Of course, I found nothing of my mystery woman or any other tear-jerker jailbird tale. I did, however, find information equally fascinating, which brings a shocking facet of the fashion to my attention. There is a long history of prison craftsmanship and for as long as there have been jails, inmates with time to fill have found a creative outlet using the few things they had access to. They have created everything from necklaces made of gum wrappers to sculptures made from wet toilet paper. There are boxes made from cigarette packages, angels carved in soap, Popsicle stick puppets and tiny chairs built with breadcrusts. I found ornate churches built in matchsticks, wallets woven in horse hair and mini tapestries made from dissembled socks. There was even a tiny sarcophagus built with fingernails.

Like so much else, this tradition has recently gone commercial.

As you read this article, thieves, murderers, sex offenders, former drug dealers and the like are sketching, sewing and selling handbags and garments on Milan's most fashionable promenades.

The line "Made in Jail" originated in Milan when four ex-convicts began to sell the striped t-shirts, bright jumpsuits and other jailbird garb, all of which they had made while imprisoned. This idea took off when Silvio Palermo appealed to regional and municipal politicians for funding and now there are fashion classes taught in jails and correctional facilities across Italy by master craftsman and celebrated designers. There are fashion shows funded by the Justice Ministry. A huge following of trendy fashion fiends are ordering products off the Internet.

The advertisement campaign for "Made in Jail" includes mug shots of former prisoners holding booking placards with inscription beneath such as "Shirt: 32 Euro." Berlin's Tegel Prison, which houses 1600 offenders and is Europe's largest jail, is another hotspot for jailhouse fashion. While prisoners have been making clothing since 1898, they are now working on a designer label called "Haeftling," the German word for inmate, which has become popular in Tokyo. A women's prison in Rome is currently working on an avante-guard wedding collection.

Some note a comical element. Imagine bald, muscular, tattooed inmates, diligently at work with their needlepoint, ironing boards and sewing machines. Yet prison fashion is part of a social program that aims to rehabilitate prisoners. The idea behind this is that a newly gained sense of success and a learned work ethic prepares these people to re-enter the free world with skills necessary for employment. Last year, the Justice Ministry reported that 612 prisoners found work through 62 different cooperatives similar to "Made in Jail."

Despite the huge following, prison garb is not for everyone. Not everyone feels comfortable wearing underwear or a wedding dress made by a murderer. Some skeptics condemn these organizations, claiming it's just an excuse for cheap labor and exploited workers, no better than sweatshops. Others wonder whether paying prisoners at all is justifiable or beneficial. However, there is still the argument that this sort of productivity will rehabilitate damaged criminals. A new self worth, along with many other psychological benefits, might encourage inmates to be productive members of society when they are released, and not fall back onto old criminal habits.

Prison-inspired fashion trends have appeared for decades now in the cutting edge mainstream world, although maybe not everyone is aware of it. Superbaggy pants, for example, are an homage to ill-fitting prison garb; belts are not permitted in most jails and many inmates lose weight while inside. This practice worked its way from the slammer into Hip Hop culture, adopted by rappers such as Ice T in the nineties, enhancing the tough guy cachet. Kriss Kross took it a step further by wearing baggy pants backwards and to this day, many from coast to coast are hobbled by these low riding pants.

In 2005, Virginia passed a droopy drawers bill that would fine $50 for any "lewd and indecent" bagginess. This bill was shot down by the State Senate two days later. In 2004, Louisiana lawmakers attempted to pass a similar "no to plumber's crack" law that would forbid intentional exposure of undergarments. That bill was also rejected by the State Senate. Thank God for checks and balances. While I am not a fan of the trend, those laws cross the line.

Now not only are these prison inspired trends manifesting in pop culture but our criminal population are becoming the designers. Everyone watch the runways for the stereotypical striped jail jumpsuit this fall. Even cuffs and chains could appear along with shaved heads. Who knows what zany trends will occur in the bizarre and unpredictable world of fashion.

Passionate Palate: Science and More Right Out of the Kitchen

"You're the Emeril of science!" enthused a young participant at one of the classes Jo-Ann Tiranno presents at local libraries.

The programs libraries offer are varied and often intriguing, but, according to local librarians, few have been as exciting as those created by Jo-Ann Tiranno of Passionate Palate over the last few months.

Ms. Tiranno, a chef, has put together a roster of programs she describes as classes with a "kitchen eye view" of science, history, culture and art. The classes, for children, young adults and adults, spring out of her enthusiasm for cooking and science. They range from the Harry Potter-influenced "Kitchen Wizards" to "Getting Juiced About Nutrition" to "The Pi of Pie" to maps of spice routes (and their import) of Marco Polo's time, as well as vegetarian sushi classes.

"I've always been interested in the chemistry of cooking," said Ms. Tiranno. She described her programs as "a little bit of performance art and a lot of education."

At the East Hampton Library, "Kitchen Wizards," (in which kids make "potions" from common kitchen ingredients) was so popular that "We had double the number of kids wanting to get in than we had space for," said Children's Librarian, Alexandra Giambruno. "We had parents and kids outside waiting for cancellations. Usually a few people cancel at the last minute; no one did."

Jo-Ann Tiranno brings her Passionate Palate all over Long Island. On the East End she has appeared at libraries in Southampton, East Hampton, Riverhead, Cutchogue, Mattituck and Greenport.

One of her unique classes deals with tessellations - interlocking patterns, such as in Arabian mosaics and the paintings of M.C. Escher. Ms. Tiranno said, "In the class we go over the use of tessellations in history and architecture, how they are used in quilts. It shows the importance of math in art. The children find tessellations in the environment. We look at geometric shapes and how they can be rotated. Then we use food — dried beans and grains — to make our own tessellations. All this ties in history, art, culture, science and math."

Bev Christianson, Children's Librarian at Cutchogue, said, "It was obvious to me Jo-Ann was very comfortable with young people and knows how to engage them in what she likes. This is something you can't teach. As someone who is looking for quality programs, she is the kind of person I wanted to have. She knows what interests children – something you have to have a gut feeling for. She works with age levels that are often difficult to get excited about certain subjects. The kids don't realize they are picking things up. They walk out not knowing they've learned a lot."

Ms. Tiranno said, "All the classes are hands on. The difference between this and a regular class is we make a mess." Whether learning how to change the ph of foods or how to make a jelly roll and viscosity wands in "Jelly's Last Jam," the kids have their hands in something they create from scratch. There is always something they can eat then and there, such as an Asian stir-fry concoction in "Wok And Roll."

"Where kids might be reticent to try things at home, if they make it, they'll eat it," said Ms. Tiranno.

She added, "I especially like to work with young adults, because they're really seeking to find out things and ask great questions." As an example, she referred to her "So You Want To Be A Vegetarian?" class. "I'm a longtime vegetarian who has taught this for many years. I find there is a vast difference between the kids I taught then and now. They are more savvy. The information they come in with and the questions they ask allows me to take the class to another level."

Joe Cortale, Children's Librarian at Greenport, said that Ms. Tiranno "brings an element of fun and excitement. Parents love to see their kids having fun and learning at the same time. The attitude of the parents that sat in was: 'When can she come back?'"

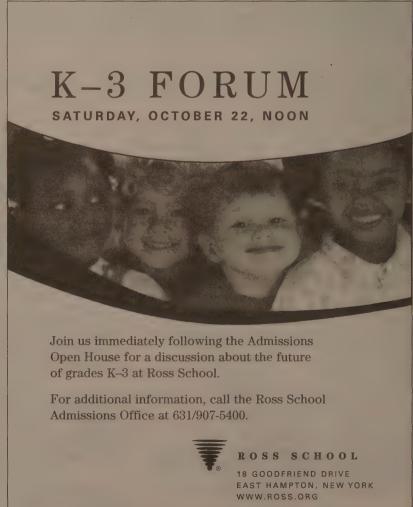

As she was blowing up balloons with the gases released from baking soda, one boy yelled out, "What else can you blow up?" Perhaps Ms. Tiranno has "blown up" preconceptions about staid educational programs.

Jo-Ann Tiranno performs and educates not just in libraries, but also at schools and civic groups. This autumn she will be adding new programs. While reprising such favorites as "Kitchen Wizards" for Halloween and when the next Potter flick debuts around Thanksgiving, in addition she will be showcasing a forensics class in which DNA will be extracted from vegetables (yes, this can actually be done); and then there will be the repulsively fascinating "All About Slime."

Ms. Tiranno can be reached at (631) 744-0465. For a complete list of programs view her website at passionatepalate.org.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Apples – they're sweet, tart, juicy and crunchy and they're autumn's favorite fruit. Take your pick. And you can take your pick at our local apple orchard, The Milk Pail on Rt. 27 in Water Mill or on the North Fork at Wickham's Fruit Farm in Cutchogue on Rt. 25. Some of the current varieties for picking are Empire, Cortland, Golden Delicious, Honeycrisp, McIntosh and Royal Gala. Apples are truly an all-American ingredient, lending their homey quality to any recipe that includes them.

Apples can make a decorative statement piled high in an antique ceramic bowl on a kitchen counter or dining room table but they belong in the refrigerator. At room temperature they can quickly lose their crispness.

Apples, one of the first new fruits of the fall season, play an important role in the Jewish High Holidays that began last week on October 3 with Rosh Hashanah, and culminates on October 12 with Yom Kippur. On this holiday it is tradition to dip apple slices in honey with prayers to wish everyone a good and sweet year. Apple preserves, a recipe in the Sephardic tradition, consists of grated apples poached in sugar syrup for a sweet New Year. It appears we have a bumper crop of apples, and apple pudding cake couldn't be simpler to prepare. Just mix everything in a bowl in their order, transfer to a baking pan and bake. An apple salsa with red pepper, jalapeno, currants and cumin can add an extra kick as a side dish to a roast.

APPLE PUDDING CAKE

Where do recipes come from? I've adapted this simple cake from a 2004 recipe in Newsday. The changes were significant, and, I'm grateful for the inspiration.

Makes 8 servings

1 cup all purpose flour

2/3 cup sugar

1 teaspoon salt

1/2 teaspoon baking soda

1/2 teaspoon cinnamon

1/2 cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, softened

2 large eggs, beaten

2 tablespoons boiling water

2 1/2 cups Gala apples, peeled, cut into small cubes (about 2 large apples)

1/2 cup chopped walnuts or pecans

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Butter a 9-inch cake pan with removable bottom, or pie plate.

1. Sift flour, sugar, salt, baking soda, cinnamon into a large bowl. Add softened butter and cut into the mixture with 2 kitchen knives, breaking up lumps as well as possible. Add beaten egg and boiling water and stir until smooth. Fold in apples and nuts and stir to mix to coat the ingredients. The batter will be a little stiff.

2. With a rubber spatula, scrape the batter into the prepared cake pan or pie plate and bake about 40 minutes, or until the point of a knife inserted in the center comes out clean. Serve with a sprinkle of powdered sugar on top. Store the cake for up to 3 days in a covered cake stand.

APPLE PRESERVES

Apples, one of the first new fruits of the fall season, are connected with the High Holiday of Yom Kippur when breaking the fast. In the tradition of Ashkenazic Jews, apple slices are dipped in honey, for a sweet New Year, the holiday that began last week with Rosh Hashanah and culminates this coming week with Yom Kippur. In another tradition, that of Sephardic Jews, apples are cooked in a sugar syrup until a thick jam-like preserve.

Makes approximately 4 cups

The apples

2 pounds tart apples, such as Granny Smith or Empire

Juice of 1 lemon

For the syrup

2 1/2 cups water

1 1/2 cups sugar

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

1. Peel and core apples. Reserve the skin and seeds and put the apples in a bowl with the lemon juice.

2. Meanwhile bring the water and sugar to a boil in a large saucepan, and then remove from the heat. Put the cores, seeds and skins in a separate pot with a little water and simmer for 15 minutes. Strain off the liquid and add it to the sugar water. Simmer over low heat until you have syrup that will evenly coat the

3. Grate the apples and add to the syrup. Cook about 10 minutes over low heat. Remove from the heat, stir in the vanilla extract, and cool. This should have the consistency of a heavy jam: it will not set hard.

SAVORY APPLE SALSA

Prepare the salsa up to one day ahead for flavors to mellow, then serve as a side dish with a main course of your choice.

Yield: 2 1/2 cups

2 Granny Smith, Gala or Pippin apples

1/2 cup chopped red onion

1 small jalapeno, trimmed and seeded

1/3 cup dried currants

1/2 cup fresh orange juice

Grated zest of 1 orange

1 teaspoon ground cumin 1 tablespoon chopped cilantro

1 tablespoon chopped chantro

1. Rinse and pat apples dry. Core apples and cut into 1/4-inch dice. Peel and cut onion into 1/4-inch dice. Mince jalapeno and combine in a bowl with apples and onion.

2. Place currants in a small bowl with orange juice to plump, about 15-20 minutes. Add to the apple mixture with remaining ingredients and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Prepare up to one or two days ahead. Refrigerate, covered in a suitable container until ready to serve.

Snacks That Pack a Healthy Punch

"I'll trade ya!" and "I'll give you my snack for yours," were common exchanges that I heard while on lunch duty during my eight years in education. My 320 days of lunch duty (40 weeks in a year times one period of lunch duty a week....but who's counting?) taught me that the snacks that weren't traded were the best ones. They are the ones that were held onto by the owner, savored, eaten ever so slowly and occasionally shared with a good friend. As I dodged projectile chicken nuggets, personal pan pizzas used as frisbees, snipped 100 sticky syrup packets and opened more juice boxes than I could count, I would admire the lunches that were creative. I commented on the snacks that were special and shared in the child's joy if mommy, daddy, grandma or grandpa had slipped an "I love you note" into the lunch bag. I'm now going to share "secrets with you from the lunchroom"....but please don't tell your children what I'm about to say.....

"Healthy snacks" are not words that your child wants to hear or eat, but you can sneak in a snack without them knowing it's good for them by making it look good. One of the cutest lunch treats that I ever saw was a "notebook sandwich and pretzel pencil." The parent of my 4th grade student found it in Better Homes and Gardens and clipped the recipe for me to use. You take two pieces of white bread, cut off the crusts, fill with jelly or your choice of spread, tie the ends of one side of the "notebook" with licorice so it looks like the spiral part of the book. To make the pencil use a rod pretzel and shave one end very gently with a knife so it loses its hard edge and looks sort of like a point. Stick a marshmallow at the end and attach a cone shaped snack like Bugles to the other end. It's really cute and the parent who did this always attached a little note to the clear plastic bag that she wrapped it in. Her daughter used to make everyone at the table crack up when she ate her "notebook and pencil."

As an adult I love vegetables. Give me asparagus or broccoli with a little butter and I'm happy. But mention vegetables to a kid, see them yell "gross" and run the other way. You can make their veggies come to life with a little creativity and I guarantee that they'll have fun making them with you and eating them at school. Take a carrot stick, peel and cut into logs. Take the peeler and shave it so that little fringes are all over it. Take a triangle of cheese and "paste" it to the carrot using Cream Cheese. Paste on raisins for eyes and you have a bird.

Make broccoli into a fun snack by turning it upside down. Make the flower part the hair. Paste on eyes, nose and mouth using raisins, nuts and licorice pieces. Your children will laugh at the funky hair on the broccoli man. You can use pretzel sticks for arms and legs.

If you want to have fun with fruit, turn your apples and pears into cute little characters in much the same way. Use a little frosting as glue and put eyes, nose and mouth on an apple using licorice, granola, raisins, grapes, cherry slices. You can give the apple an orange slice hat, pretzel stick legs and arms. Make a fruit kabob by alternating fruit slices on a pretzel stick. This colorful snack will be a lot of fun for your child to assemble, take apart and eat.

One of my favorite snacks that I used to make as a child was using graham crackers, raisins, frosting and granola. My mom and I would use frosting glue to assemble the graham crackers into a box. We'd fill the box with the granola and raisins. I'd call it my treasure chest. My mom would switch the snacks around in my box. Sometimes it would be pretzels, sometimes grapes. It was fun being surprised and there was always plenty to share with my friends.

Enjoy creating healthy, fun snacks for your child to take to school or come home to. I guarantee it will be something that they enjoy and talk about in the cafeteria. Attach a quick post it with a little message inside the bag and make your child's day just a little bit healthier, happier and brighter.

So Many Hair Care Products, So Little Time

Did you know that there is an enormous difference between a pomade and a crèème pomade? Well, there is, as I unhappily discovered last week. To style my hair, I normally use gööt 2b playful, one of FratBoy Concept's göt 2b products. The crème pomade feels like a soft cream, yet it holds my hair well without making it brittle. But when I started running low last week, my Rite Aid did not have any playful in stock, so I picked up göt 2b defiant. Both playful and defiant are pomades, so how different can they be, I wondered. Perhaps the problem is that I never took French, as my mother had wanted. The pomade is totally hard and sticky, with a consistency almost like rendered fat left in the refrigerator. And it smells distinctly of orange. Why on earth would I want to walk around smelling like oranges?

There was a time when everyone used hairspray. That was a simple time. My father still uses hair spray; he disfavors change. He once forgot to bring his hairspray when he was visiting for a weekend, so I lent him my crème pomade. I think he found it most peculiar, and I fear it may have caused him quite a bit of consternation. Of course, in the 1950s, they used that dippity-doo or whatever it was called, for the look memorialized in the classic, terrific movie Grease! When I was growing up in the 1980s, the basic choices seemed to be gel or mousse. Remember mousse? I am quite certain that mousse was nothing but a brilliant marketing ploy, repackaging ordinary shaving cream, raising the price, and telling people to put it in their hair.

Today is a different story. While one can still find hair spray, gel and mousse in the hair care section, that is only the beginning. The array of choices is dazzling, confusing and frustrating. I spent 15 minutes - 15 minutes! - trying to select a substitute for my göt 2b playful, and I did a bad job of it at that. Just deciding among the $g\ddot{o}t$ 2b products took time, and looking through the dozens of other brands practically caused me to drop to the floor into a fetal position.

Take the göt 2b line, for instance. Leaving aside shampoos and conditioners (yes, there are many brands, but the basic product choices seem to relate only to the simply question of hair type), there are at least 22 göt 2b styling products: "defiant pomade" and "playful crème pomade," of course, as well as "dazzling shine spray pump," "glossy shine serum," "spiked up styling gel," "rubber spiking cement," "spiking freeze spray," "styling spiking spray," "styling spiking glue," "kinky curling mousse," "curled-up spray," "defining curl cream," "shimmer curl gel," "glued extreme mousse," "shagged out texturizing liquid fiber," "smoothed over straightening balm," "in control hard hold hair spray," "voluptuous volume hairspray," "voluptuous volume mousse," "voluptuous volume styling lotion," "diva sparkle spray," and "brilliant radiant hair glaze." Glaze? I may be a ham, but not the kind that is baked. Also, what are we to make of the "liquid fiber"? Does it help to make one regular? And what possible difference can there be between the "shine spray" and "shine serum," other than the possibility that the serum must be taken

And that is just the beginning. I went to DrugStore.com and called up all styling products. A whopping 35 pages of 15 products each came up. That's 525 items. Is this really necessary? I guess with spiky, messy hair styles so popular today, there is room in the market for all of that, but I have to admit to feeling a bit dizzy - and I have not even used Tigi's "Dumb Blonde Reconstructor," one of at least 25 hairstyling products under the Bed Head should take on. Somewhere on the Internet, perhaps on DrugStore.com or perhaps on the various companies' individual websites, there is a description of each styling product. The description surely tells what makes each product unique, what it will do for different hair types, who should buy it, etc. Someone should cull together all this information, and create a giant chart with hair types on one axis and hair styles on another axis. Then, throughout the grid should be each product that is appropriate for whatever hair type and style you are looking up. This chart could then be sold to drugstores throughout the world and displayed next to the styling products.

I do have a solution, which some entrepreneur

HEALTH, BEAUTY & FITNESS Fall Surfing – Bigger and Better

Picture yourself bobbing in the water, atop a piece of polished fiberglass. You are 50 yards out, just past the breaking point of the waves. You spot a large set rolling in and face your board towards the sand. You paddle, flailing your arms rapidly, attempting to move at the same speed as the wave and accept its energy. You feel the board begin to stabilize and you accelerate as the tip points down the face of the wave. In one motion you thrust yourself onto both feet, bend your knees, and take a low center of gravity. As you glide down the face of the wave, your arms immediately register to reach a plane that keeps your body balanced. You pump your legs in order to stay ahead of the crashing wave and the white water (that once it consumes you will toss your body like a rag doll). You surpass the collapsing crest and ride down the line as the clear water beneath your feet exposes an aquatic world, like peering into an alternate dimension through a glassy floor. It's the closest you'll ever get to walking on water. Have you ever reached this physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual higher ground? This paradoxical state of meditation and action? Am I being overly dramatic? Maybe. Maybe not. Depends on whether you ask a true surfer.

You don't have to be on the active search for nirvana to enjoy surfing. You can enjoy it for the simplistic fun of getting wet and riding waves. It's also a great upper body exercise. The act of paddling, especially when through a rough breakwater, naturally sculpts and strengthens the pectoral, traps, rhomboids, latissimus dorsi, and scapular muscles. In nonscientific terms: your chest, shoulder, and lateral back muscles. You also work your triceps, biceps and forearms, mostly through duck-diving the breaking waves on your paddle out. Abdominal, upper and lower back muscles are also utilized through the paddling motion. Surfing is an aerobic exercise that builds the stamina of your cardiovascular system. Biking and running are perfect counterparts to surfing. They will help build leg muscles and prevent those two toothpicks you call legs from getting any skinnier. The best thing about surfing, running, and biking is that they are motivated activities that get you outside in the fresh air. It is an ideal alternative to purchasing a costly gym membership and wasting hours on the elliptical machine, being forced to listen to European techno music. I used to be a gym nut until I discovered surfing. Now I look at the gym as a masochistic dungeon.

Through surfing, you can naturally maintain shape without packing on unnecessary bulk. You burn calories while toning muscles. This literally sculpts your frame and effectively sheds excess weight.

Although we tend to think of the north shore of Hawaii and southern California as the prime spots for surfing, the south shore of Long Island is no stranger to good surf. The beach breaks from Far Rockaway to the rocky bottom breaks of Montauk all provide the Long Island surfer a playground for liquid fun. If you are interested in surfing, Ditch Plains in Montauk is an ample, consistent break that is an easy place to learn on a long board. But be warned: crowded beaches are not a good place to learn. You can aggravate locals if you don't know what you're doing. It's best to practice catching waves and standing up in the white water, then gradually progress to the outer breaks. If you're truly hardcore, then surfing is not restricted to the summer months. In fact, the best season for East Coast surfers is the fall, or hurricane season. In light of recent events, I would gladly accept flat waters if it were possible to take back the damage Hurricanes Katrina and Rita inflicted. But it's the hurricanes that stay off shore and die out in the Atlantic that produce such grand surf for Long Island.

Summer is over. The days are getting shorter and the nights are getting cooler. Deal with it. As October begins, beach activities fade slowly from the mind. No more ocean swims, no more beach jogs, no more mano e mano Kadima paddle games. But the surfer impatiently waits for the Indian summer to begin, welcoming warm waters and hurricane swells. By starting to surf today, you can justify your colorful boardshorts and overuse of the word "dude." You'll avoid being labeled a poseur. So get a wetsuit, pick up a board, and get out in the water.

Dans GOME The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Evening Drama

An evening drive through East Hampton shows this is an area where lots of money is spent on poor garden lighting. Properties look like airport runways, some with glaring spotlights shining in eyes of the passersby, and others annoying neighbors and bleaching out garden beauty.

Gardens are the best "rooms" for entertaining so they deserve some planning. With a few simple ideas, garden lighting can illuminate, invite, and provide style and elegance. In fact, research shows subtle lighting is as effective for security purposes as glaring lights - and much more appealing.

If everything is lit, nothing is really lit, so it is important to create a garden environment with a sense of focus.

Start by watching the patterns of light and shadow created by the sun/moon. Notice the effects of direct sunlight versus diffused light, the interaction of shadows on buildings, and the action of water in a fountain or pool. You can create similar patterns by placing lighting fixtures to create intriguing shapes, colors, shadows, and reflections.

Since the nighttime garden is different than the daytime garden, spots that look impressive during the morning may disappear when it is dark; walkways with flowers and bordering trees may become ghostly shapes at night. Use a flashlight to experiment with effects and notice areas overlooked during the day. Take note of trees, shrubs, flowers, fountains, patios and other areas that are easily seen from the interior of your home.

Water is used extensively in garden landscaping and can serve as a reflector, diffuser, or light conductor. Experiment with light that plays across a spray of water, and the glow that can be lit from below the surface. The light will dance back and forth with the movement of

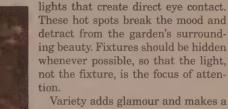

Of course, you must take the neighbors into consideration and avoid lights that shine into their homes or affect their own lighting schemes. Nothing is more aggravating than "light pollution" - which is almost as bad as throwing garbage into a neighbor's

As you plan, keep three basics in mind: beautiful effects, safety, and security. Beauty ought to be the main focus of garden lighting. Properly lit, trees, plants, and landscape features become a "wonderland." Views can be extended and transformed, and living spaces can be stretched for entertaining.

Equally important is safety. Lighting can direct the flow of traffic, highlight steps and changes in elevation, and emphasize possible dangers, like the edge of a pool or pond. Security adds another level to good lighting design. The overall plan should include the illumination of doorways, porches, garages, and other walkways. In a few instances, it may make sense to eliminate dark areas where intruders could lurk (but this should not be the primary focus of lighting).

Remember that less is more in lighting design. Avoid the tendency to over-light. Avoid positioning

Variety adds glamour and makes a garden more visually appealing. Part of the delight of a night garden is mystery. Highlight special plants and areas, but also allow for some dark spots. The shadows complement the overall design.

Downward and crossward-facing lights create broad illumination of the objects below. When they overlap, their patterns soften shadows and create more uniform effects. Crossward-facing lights on textured surfaces illuminate high points and increase shadows on recessed points. Brick, stucco, and tree bark all radiate under this effect.

A dappled pattern of light and shadow that simulates moonlight can be created by mounting fixtures in mature trees, with some lights facing downward and others upward. This soft light creates interesting shadows as the light filters between the branches and leaves of trees on its way down.

Use low-wattage lights for walkways, sidewalks, and borders. Lighting in this manner increases safety by showing where paths begin and end. Path and spread lighting also serves as a directional feature along front drives and entranceways. However, be

Home is Where the Wine is Sometimes, ritual is desirable. There are some events that simply require some sort of acknowledgement for their significance. Moving to a new home is one of these things. Sure, you could easily load up your car with the contents of your life and relocate these contents to a new outlet, down the street or across the country. But sitting in a new room surrounded by your stuff does not make it home. It's the people you know and love stopping by, looking at your new digs, and enjoying it with you - that makes it home.

I just moved into a new apartment in Brooklyn. It's been a long time coming, and it's finally here. My best friend and I came with carloads, aided by family members, and unleashed our possessions on the blank white walls of A Brand New Start. Well, A Brand New Start with a leaking refrigerator and a bedroom door that won't shut, but who's looking for perfection?

The beds came first, and then the couch. A dining room table followed behind, and then came the makeit-yourself bookshelf. Before we knew it, we were carpenters constructing the identity of ouR new pad. Still, something was missing. Now, I have to admit, as I carefully placed The Fountainhead, Lolita, The Unbearable Lightness of Being, and Everything is Illuminated on the shelf, I felt the warmth of home. As we arranged our pictures on the walls, color and welcome crept into the apartment.

But it wasn't until Saturday night, when friends came armed with bottles of wine and potted plants, that we really felt at home. And that was due entirely to our housewarming party.

When hosting a housewarming party, there is one major catalyst that drives your preparation: to make it look presentable. You just painted your bedroom, just ordered your bed, just laid eyes on this apartment for the first time..... and now you are sharing it with the world as your own. So get it ready. You need to make sure the things that people will require at a party are intact. Build that coffee table already, because if it's not there, where will they set their drinks?

Another key component is to make sure your stereo system is set up. Even if the speakers are all tangled up in the back seat of your car, shoved in with a couple of winter sweaters and a chipped mug that's accompanied you since college, they must be salvaged and utilized because honestly, what's a party without music?

Okay, so you've got your music, you've got your coffee table, and you've got a few books on the shelf. Now you have to make this halfway finished apartment look like home. And that doesn't mean you have to get an oil painting portrait of yourself and your roommate to hang in the living room. It's really very simple once you have a few staples, the rest is just an illusion.

Go to the local market, or bodega, as the case may be, and get two bouquets of flowers. We bought a bunch of purple orchids and a bunch of orange day lilies. Then separate the bunches and mix the colors together, and spread them around the house. Nothing makes a home quite like fresh, colorful flowers. If you don't have any vases yet, use that empty bottle of wine you cracked the first night you spent here. Or the one you cracked the second night, or even the third

Speaking of wine, one of the first items we had, as a gift from an older sibling, was a wine rack. But it was so intimidating, sitting there empty and dry. Buying a case of wine is a great investment, and you save money by purchasing in bulk. Then you can fill up that wine rack - people will feel comforted to know there are provisions. Also keep in mind, though, that guests often bring wine as a gift. That's nice - of course, our guests only brought giant bottles that didn't fit on our brand new fancy wine rack, but that's okay. Most of it was gone by the end of the night anyway.

Finally, and this is really the only other requirement of a host at a housewarming party - have something to snack on. Nothing warms the home like the hearth of a kitchen, right? So make some salsa, bake some cookies, mix up sangria. Make use of your new kitchen to provide snacks for guests. It absolutely makes it feel even more like home.

Dan's HOME

Coming Out of the (Walk-In) Closet

The room I shared with my two brothers, Matthew and Jesse, had a small walk-in closet, which I shared with Jesse. Our room was situated on one side of the living room, such that if you kept walking from the living room, you would reach the dining room, but if you opened the door on the right, you would go into our room. When the house was dark, walking past the dining room always seemed sort of scary to us kids, so we would scurry into the room and shut the door as quickly as possible. Once on the safe side of the door, we would be in a short hallway which opened up into the room itself. The door to the walk-in closet was along that hallway.

It had a light that turned on when the door was open, like a refrigerator light. One night, when I knew that the house was dark and Jesse was on his way to the room, I hid in the closet with the door closed, and waited. Then, Jesse rushed past the evil dining room, entered our room, shutting the door behind him, and then opened the closet door – only to suffer the shock of seeing someone illuminated inside. He screamed.

Such hijinks are merely a small part of the joys of walk-in closets.

Even though I had that walk-in closet as a teenager, I didn't appreciate it at the time, given my living circumstances and also a complete lack of wisdom. Over time, my living circumstances changed. For years in New York City, I lived in apartments with very little closet space, as do most people. This is why so many people in the City buy dressers and armoires for their clothes. These items of furniture take up space in the bedroom, space that could be used to better effect if only there were already someplace to put all the clothes.

The problem is worse for women, whose wardrobes tend to be extensive. Sometimes I am surprised that women even consider living in New York City, knowing full well that they will confront an M.I.T.-worthy engineering problem of clothes storage.

A large walk-in closet solves the problem. While this solution does not work in New York City, it is becoming increasingly common in the Hamptons. For nearly 20 years now, most new construction features a walk-in closet in the master suite, and very high-end homes sometimes have two walk-in closets, one for each spouse or perhaps one for clothes and one for shoes. Walk-in closets have become so popular that companies exist for the sole purpose of designing the shelves, drawers and other storage space inside a walk-in closet.

My walk-in closet seems enormous to me. In fact, I have never done anything to improve it, such as putting in shelves and other storage units. The builder had put in a head-level shelf/hanging apparatus around the perimeter. When I moved from the City, I brought my then-needed dresser, which had taken up space in my bedroom, and put it into the closet. Between the old dresser, the shelf space and the hanging space, I am all set. (Actually, I have a second closet in my room, but it is tiny, so I use it for rarely-worn suits.) I even store four "director's chairs," which I use for dinner parties of more than eight people, in the walk-in closet.

I realize that many people are thinking, "What a waste! If I had that much closet space, I would fill it to the brim with clothes. If that means buying more clothes, all the better." I say to those people: I agree, but that is a long-term and expensive project. The day may come — I daresay, will come — when I must take out the director's chairs and build better storage space, but for now my closet works for what I have.

It is hilarious when I have new visitors from the City. I take great pride in my house and love showing it off, especially the kitchen. Yet, it is always the walk-in closet that receives the most enthusiastic response. Never mind the sub-zero, never mind the double-height living room, never mind the screened-in porch. All that really matters is the walk-in closet.

I would be remiss if I did not mention an important, but rarely acknowledged advantage of walk-in closets. According to an informal survey, walk-in closets rarely are inhabited by monsters, poltergeists or evil monkeys. This is a great relief to children, whose little closets historically have caused such suffering.

Incidentally, walk-in closets are also good for people with a really dopey sense of humor, because they allow you to say, "I'm in the closet. Now I've come out of the closet." Of course, I would never think of such a silly joke.

Estates by Diane Strecker

Unlike the East End, realtors up island are seeing a slow down in the market and inventory listings are beginning to build. A Wading River realtor told me this week that there are many houses on the market in her area and owners are listing them far too high. Home owners who have watched the market climb so rapidly in such short period of time seem to have become overzealous in the pricing of their homes. A broker in the area refused to take a listing recently when the owner wanted to list the home at $900,000, when in the opinion of the broker, its value was clearly in the $750,000 range. You can still purchase a substantial size home in Wading River in the $600,000 range. A 4-bedroom 3-bath Victorian in Wading River with a 2-car garage, wraparound porch on an acre cul-de-sac is on the market right now for $\frac{1}{2}$ $639,000 and smaller ranches in that same town can still be found in the low $300,000.

When pricing real estate one should not confuse their area market with that of the Hamptons where prices are substantially higher and have taken dramatic leaps, not to mention the fact that properties out east were always, and always will be worth more for all the obvious reasons. The same fairly new, Victorian style home would go for about triple that, at $1.5 million approximately view of the Montauk coastline

Bridgehampton.

There are far fewer listings here in the Hamptons and they do not linger on the market as they may further west. Sometimes homes take only days to sell if they are priced right. Once again, it is supply and demand. Buyers are always watching and waiting to see what comes on the market and when a property comes on at the right price it is scooped up immediately. Because of the shortage of properties available on the East End a bidding war may occur. This has become a common practice and sellers have walked away many times with more than they asked for. Land, being the more scare commodity, will often cause a stir and bring buyers and builders out in force to bid. Most lucky land purchasers find their property via word of mouth and many times make offers before the listing hits the market. Land has brought record prices in the last year. Ocean front acres have sold in the high millions, from Southampton all the way to Montauk. A piece of land in Southampton sold for $20 million earlier this season and just two oceanfront acres in Montauk sold at $8 million. For sale presently in Southampton on prestigious Meadow Lane near Cooper Pond is a 2.4 acre piece of oceanfront land priced at $11 million. There is room for a 6000 sq ft house and in ground pool. It is listed with Sotheby's International in Southampton. It has become commonplace for buyers to find an old home or beach cottage and knock it down to build new. In South Jamesport, on the North Fork, huge homes are now replacing tiny beach cottages all along the Peconic Bay. A cottage here can be purchased between $500,000 and $700,000. And a larger home built in its place can resell immediately closer to $2 million.

HAFTA HITCHHIKE

Dear Dan,

I have been using the buses between Amagansett and East Hampton and Bridgehampton since May and as I told the Group For The South Fork, I find it interesting that there is a no service after 7 p.m. (especially a problem for us used to having cars to clog Montauk Highway). There are no trains at all northbound between Southampton and East Hampton on Sunday afternoons and evenings and Saturdays, a time when a lot of "cool stuff" is going on. There is only an 11:20 p.m. train and a very isolated train station. The two forms of transportation are parallel so maybe something could be worked out to balance the load.

New Jersey Transit (Hoboken to Port Jervis) offers service at all times and Rockland County transportation (TOR) 845-364-3333 seems to have funding for service cross county until 11:30 or 12

SPELL CHECKER

Dear Dan,

I'm a long-time reader of your paper, and look forward to it every week as I have done for more than twenty years. I especially enjoy your articles, Dan, and am simply amazed at how prolific you are. Your writing style is very refreshing and so easy to read, and your knowledge, research and indepth coverage of your subjects is indeed impressive.

My admiration for your creativity is slightly marred by a grammatical error you make quite frequently. In this week's issue, for instance, you disappointed me twice: (1) in the "You're Invited" piece in the 5th line of the 3rd column you wrote: ". Thomas, who since graduating college has..." And then again, (2) in the "Goofy" article, in the penultimate line of the 3rd column, you wrote: "...Finally, he graduates high school and he...."

You don't graduate college or high school; you graduate from college or from high school.

This is one of my pet grammatical error peeves, which I find even professional writers and TV newscasters increasingly fall into on a regular basis.

Why, do you suppose? Laziness? Ignorance? Degrading of the English language?

Keep up your fine work ... but please don't drop the "from" in the future.

THE PRICE OF LUXURY Dear Dan.

Somehow I am still feeling the sting. Think a gallon of gas is expensive? This makes one think, and also puts things in perspective.

Just a little humor to help ease the pain of your next trip to the pump...

Here goes:

 Diet Snapple 16 oz $1.29.
 $10.32 per gallon

 Lipton Ice Tea 16 oz $1.19
 $9.52 per gallon

 Gatorade 20 oz $1.59
 $10.17 per gallon

 Ocean Spray 16 oz $1.25
 $10.00 per gallon

 Brake Fluid 12 oz $3.15
 $33.60 per gallon

 Vick's Nyquil 6 oz $8.35
 $178.13 per gallon

 Pepto Bismol 4 oz $3.85
 $123.20 per gallon

 Whiteout 7 oz $1.39
 $25.42 per gallon

 Scope 1.5 oz $0.99
 $84.48 per gallon

And this is the REAL KICKER...

Evian water 9 oz $1.49...$21.19 per gallon

$21.19 for WATER – and the buyers don't even know the source. (Evian spelled backwards is Naive)

So, the next time you're at the pump be glad your car doesn't run on water, Scope, or Whiteout, or, God forbid, Pepto Bismol or Nyquil.

INDIAN SUMMER Dear Dan,

I was thrilled to see your prediction about the extended summer in the Hamptons. Although I don't expect to retreat from my summer office at

As long as the real estate values keep increasing we might as well get the use of this precious area. POOR HEARING

Dear Dan,

Being a long time 'HI FI' nut, I was eager to read Pump Up The Volume in the Sept. 23 rd issue. But was I disappointed!

First of all the three components to a stereo system are:

- 1. Music source
- 2. Amplifier
- 3. Speakers.

Then, the pre-amp (part of the amplifier) is not a 'power source'.

And, when actual components are mentioned, the amp is not even noted!

The 'expert' may have said it correctly, but then your reporter sure didn't present the facts.

Better luck next time.

Stood Up

A man and woman spent a romantic night together, probably talking over dinner and whispering sweet nothings into each other's ears. They most likely danced and held each other closely, an ideal first date. But instead of getting a goodnight kiss at her door, this woman lost her date - along with her pocketbook. She entered a Shell gas station on Montauk Highway in Hampton Bays a little after midnight on September 18, and when she returned to her car, she realized her blind date had stolen her purse. At least she learned abruptly that this man was no Prince Charming. But there are positives and negatives to learn from this dating experience. The downside is that she was robbed and humiliated, the upside is that all she has to do to get him caught is refer to her little black book. This bachelor bandit has yet to be apprehended by authorities, but when he is taken, it is certain he will be bombarded with questions on how to pick up women.

Buyer Beware

Never take shopping advice from a stranger. Clip coupons, buy preferred customer cards, and watch the Home Shopping Network. Don't heed the economic counseling of somebody you don't know. It will only cause you trouble. A woman made a grave consumer mistake when listening to a man in a Hampton Bays shopping center. He explained to her purchasing larger shampoo bottles were a better value. She bent down to check out the labels, got up, and noticed her wallet was missing and the mystery financial consultant vanished. It was not reported whether or not the larger shampoo bottles actually were a better value, but it is a fact that either way, this woman was completely ripped off.

Grape Goodness

A woman walked out of Sassafras, a clothing store on Montauk Highway in Hampton Bays, wearing a stolen purple sweatsuit valued at just under $300. There are three baffling mysteries to this story. The first: how can a purple sweatsuit possibly cost $300? The second: why would anyone want a purple sweatsuit? The third: how could a woman stroll out of a store completely unnoticed in a PURPLE SWEAT-SUIT? Until these questions can be answered, this case remains open.

Fight the Power

Do you ever feel like exploding after finding a parking ticket on your windshield? Do you ever get tired of submitting to authority? Well, here is some advice: throwing a temper tantrum is not going to get you anywhere- except an 8x10 cell. A woman apparently ripped up a parking ticket and shoved it into the pocket of a traffic control officer's uniform in East Hampton village. After two police officers witnessed this rebellious behavior and attempted to take the woman into custody, she fell to her knees and refused to be handcuffed. She was charged with 2nd-degree harassment and resisting arrest. We've all felt this frustration before, but to throw a conniption like this goes to show this woman must have been having one hell of a day- and it was before noon.

Bad Manners

Two waiters at JLX restaurant in Sag Harbor engaged in an argument over who was the bigger man, literally. One waiter was arrested for second-degree aggravated harassment and public lewdness after exposing himself to the other waiter, who happens to be his roommate, in the dining room of the restaurant. It is uncertain whether these men had a strange concept of fighting, or if the one man was just attempting to flirt with his roommate. Either way, one or both of them will be searching for a new apartment and a new job, hopefully not in the food service industry.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.

A Barn full of character, quality & charm. This warm family home for all seasons was designed by a renowned architect, built without compromise and located high in the Bridgehampton horse country on 2.3 private landscaped acres.
